THE AMERICAN HOMES BUREAU

AN ORGANIZATION SOUNDLY FINANCED

By IRVING L. BROWN

HE method for the daily planting of seeds in the minds of the American people which will blossom forth into a nation of beautiful home enthusiasts, has been established. The American Homes Bureau will continue to send forth publicity educating the American people to realize the value of a better home life, as long as industry shall last.

The entire history of organizations started for the purpose of carrying on a co-operative movement, is marked by the gravestones of associations which have started in the high flush of enthusiasm and died in the desert of insufficient funds.

The American Homes Bureau is financed. The financial foundation has been built strong and sure. An idea born of a few earnest men which found itself many times on the ashes of seeming failure, has become a giant in strength with an important industry for followers and a recognized force for the stimulation of a Better Homes Environment.

Through the annual publication of the American Homes Bureau Reference Book the revenue from the advertising pages will assure resources which will grow in power and energy as succeeding years advance. The enlargement of the better homes idea depends now, only upon how fast the industry which profits most by its exploitation will become convinced it is to the definite interest of every individual connected with it to accept it as a vital force for the building of business.

The natural channels for educational publicity are the newspapers, magazines, farm papers, lecture courses, better homes demonstrations, booklets, moving pictures, radio programs, courses for high schools and colleges, special courses for retail furniture salesmen. The activities of the Bureau have only just begun. In spite of the handicap of strained financial resources, six newspaper supplements have been produced containing some 66,000 words each, reaching a total combined circulation of 20,000,000 readers. Twice each year furniture merchants may participate in these special editions which have been so effective in teaching the public the value of home furnishings. Before this special supplement was started by the Bureau the automobile sections were the only features newspapers used for regular annual or semi-annual special editions.

In addition to the supplement, newspapers are furnished with our regular daily and weekly syndicate service written by Marion Moore. The daily service reaches a circulation of two million readers, the weekly service of three million.

Our lecture department is busy booking a circuit of towns for better homes institutes. Lecturers will speak on every phase of the subject of home furnishing with practical demonstrations and room scenes. A Better Homes Institute revives interest in furnishings like religion used to be brought back to the people by evangelists in the old revival days.

While other industries were born and progressed, for many years the furniture industry stood still. The advantages of co-operation, the value of concentrated effort, the building up of a great machine which would give the whole industry strength and vitality were allowed to lie idle like an anchor in the stream of time. It was not until the success of this great Reference Book was assured, could we hope for a continuation of the work so well started by the American Homes Bureau.

The Bureau stands out like a lighthouse in the furniture industry. Individual manufacturers and distributors have come to look upon the Bureau as a guide post in shaping their own business problems.

The American Homes Bureau is the grandest idea ever started and brought into fruition. No greater ideal can be attained than to constantly stimulate a desire for art and culture in the home. The home is the university of thought. "It is the single spot of rest which a man has upon this earth for the cultivation of his noblest sensibilities." Can the human race have any greater ambition than to be housed in a comfortable home surrounded with the books written by the genius of the ages? Can an industry have any greater ambition than to inspire men to live in an atmosphere of thought and harmony?

Within the library of the home may be found the fruits of all thought past, and the seeds of all to be. As a drop of dew contains the image of the earth and sky, so all there is of life is mirrored forth within the volumes which may enrich the library of every home.

The work of the American Homes Bureau is irresistible. The movement for Better Homes is rising with ever increasing force. No longer will this movement remain in the dream of the enthusiasts, no longer will it float in the far horizon, a new day has dawned, the seeds are beginning to sprout, make sure that you keep in step with each advancing wave.

To those who are interested mainly in utility or in greatest value for money invested, the merchant need only point out the LANE'S unusual features of construction and the fact that this cedar chest is absolutely moth-proof, dust-proof and damp-proof.

DISTINCTIVE STYLES— LASTING CONSTRUCTION

Every single LANE Cedar Chest has been designed with an eye to the style preferences of American Women. Many are in the wanted period styles, others are plainly storage types. But whether they are of cedar finished with walnut and mahogany to match bedroom furniture, or of all cedar, the same care and excellence of construction are maintained throughout.

All corners are double-locked to prevent pulling apart; panels are inseparably joined. Feet are supported by hard poplar blocks and are screwed and glued on—not nailed. Bottoms are finished and painted. Lids are specially constructed. All are fitted with Yale Locks and extra heavy brass-plated hinges and lid stays. There are many other features which every merchant should know about.

Walnut as a furniture wood

Its history and its uses

By GEO. N. LAMB

American Walnut Manufacturers Association

AMERICAN walnut is recognized as the premier cabinet wood of the world. Its leadership is due to the fact that, combined in a single species are the many desirable and necessary characteristics that make up the perfect wood for fine cabinet work. The tree that produces this wood is often called "Black Walnut," although in American and foreign markets the wood is usually designated as American walnut. Botanically, it is known as Juglans nigra. The name, American walnut covers only the single species of wood, which although it produces a wide range of beautifully figured grain, does not vary perceptibly in its fine mechanical qualities.

SOURCE OF SUPPLY

AMERICAN walnut is found from southern New England and within New York south to Florida, west to Texas, north through the eastern half of Kansas and Nebraska, and in the southern half of the lake states. Its range is over a million square miles of territory, and it occurs in thirty two states. The principal commercial production is from Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Illinois, Missouri, Iowa and Kansas.

AVAILABLE SUPPLY

AMERICAN walnut is a widely scattered tree, and no considerable areas of walnut are available for lumbering. However, it is to be found in most of the remaining stands of hardwood timber, and has been widely planted and protected in a wood lot, yard and roadside tree. It is estimated that there is available 1,800,000,000 board feet of merchantable timber. The present rate of consumption is approximately 50,000,000 board feet; therefore the available supply will last for thirty-six years. This does not take into consideration, however, that much new growth will mature before that time. As a matter of fact, there will always be a fair supply of walnut for cabinet purposes. The annual production has averaged about 50,000,000 feet for the last twenty-five years, but prior to the war most of this production was exported to Europe, where American walnut is considered the choicest of all cabinet woods. Today, America is using its own walnut, and Europe must be content with only enough for its very finest cabinet work.

HISTORICAL USE OF WALNUT

WALNUT has been used for furniture for hundreds of years. Many of the oldest and best preserved pieces of furniture in the great museums of the world are of walnut. It was first used in Italy during the early Renaissance, 1400 to 1500 A. D., and its use was common from 1500 to 1600 A. D. during the period known as the Classic Renaissance. It continued to be the favored cabinet wood through the Later Renaissance, 1600 to 1700 A. D. As the influence of this great revival of learning and arts spread to other countries, the renaissance architectural styles that dominated furniture styles spread to Spain, France, Flanders, and England, and XVI periods are chiefly recorded in walnut. Much of the fine old Spanish furniture was made of walnut. Chippendale, the first of a number of great English designers of the Georgian period, which includes Heppelwhite, Sherrer, Sheraton, and the Brothers Adam, was an expert worker of walnut. The finest of the antiques from Flanders and Holland are of walnut.

In the United States our earliest fine furniture was imported from Europe and followed the prevailing styles of the time. By the middle of the 18th century fine cabinet work had developed in this country, and the native American walnut was the choicest of the woods used. In Moore's Old Furniture Book he says, "The material used for nearly all William and Mary, and Queen Anne pieces of native make (and most of them were the work of local joiners), was a singularly beautiful black walnut of deep rich color that lent rare distinction to any article for which it was employed." Walnut furniture has been associated with the great names and periods of American history; not only that, but it has helped make history. American soldiers have always carried guns with walnut stocks. It is the one wood of sufficient strength and stability for this exacting use. In the last great war it also was the preferred wood for airplane propellers, another supremely exacting use of a cabinet wood.

In the Victorian period, which includes the Civil War days and the decade following, walnut was the principal wood used in furniture; but except for the excellence of the materials used, Americans were not proud of this period. Furniture design dropped to its uttermost depth, and together with an extremely dark finish, made most of the furniture of this period hopelessly ugly. Little of it would survive today if it were not for the fact that it is made of walnut. By 1890 the Black Walnut period in this country had passed, and gradually Europe absorbed the production of walnut to make better use of it than we had done during the preceding decades. Until 1910, furniture manufacturers experimented with various designs and woods. Since then, the modern era of furniture design has developed, and with it a return to American walnut. Little walnut was available for furniture during the world each in turn produced its finest furniture in walnut. In England, which has given the world many of the greatest designers and the finest of furniture, walnut has always been held in high esteem. The periods of Queen Anne and William and Mary are commonly referred to as "The Age of Walnut." In France the famous Louis XIV, XV, and war, but since then it has rapidly come to be America's leading cabinet wood. Furniture design has passed through a series of revivals of the classic styles, and in each walnut has predominated. It has been used by designers to produce the greatest mass of beautiful furniture the world has ever seen. The common people of today may have pieces of walnut furniture the equal of that which once only royalty might enjoy.

HOW WALNUT IS PRODUCED

AMERICAN walnut is used in furniture as raw material in the form of lumber and veneers. The lumber is used for the solid framework, and veneers for the intervening surfaces. Such pieces as chairs, benches, and small tables are made of lumber. The tops, fronts, and sides of larger pieces, especially enclosed pieces such as buffets and dressers, are of built-up plywood with walnut veneer surfaces.

The smaller logs that come to the mill go into lumber, while the large clear logs are manufactured into veneer. Stumps and "burls" are also cut into veneers. It is well to remember that the cream of the walnut production, chosen for its size, freedom from defect, and beauty of grain or figure, goes into veneers. Probably not over 10% of the walnut produced is suitable for veneers, certainly not one stump in a hundred can be used. Burls are very scarce and the mill that finds several good ones in a year is fortunate.

The production of walnut lumber at the saw mill is similar to that of other species, except that greater care must be taken in the cutting. Walnut logs gathered principally from the farms are apt to have all kinds of "iron" embedded in them, nails and fencing being the most common. Every mill has its pile of "nailies."

The production of walnut veneers has become highly specialized and great skill is necessary to produce the quality of walnut veneers required by the furniture industry. Walnut veneers are produced by sawing, slicing, and rotary cutting, principally by the two latter methods for the furniture trade. For either method the logs are steamed or soaked before cutting. On the slicer a half or quarter section of a log is bolted fast, and a huge knife removes a thin sheet from the flat surface. The rotary machine is a huge lathe on which the log is turned against a long knife which removes a continuous sheet of wood in the manner that a bolt of wide ribbon is unrolled. Sometimes a half of a walnut log is bolted to a projection from the axis of the lathe, and as the lathe turns, this section swings past the knife in a wide sweeping arc, and this is known as the "half rotary" method of cutting veneers. Slicing and half round methods produce stripe effects because the cutting is mostly at right angles to the growth rings. (See Figure 4.) Rotary cut wood shows a series of widely spaced irregular lines because the knife may stay within a single growth ring for several inches in cutting around the log. (See Figure 5.) The veneers produced from each log are kept together just as they come from the machine so that the manufacturer may have thousands of square feet of the same type of wood. This also makes it possible to do the beautiful matching. When veneers are sliced, no sawdust is cut away so the figure of the top side of one piece of veneer is identical with the bottom side of the adjoining slice. In fact, the pattern of quite a number of consecutive cuttings are usually very similar in appearance. This makes it possible to produce a number of matched panels of similar appearance.

THE FIGURE IN WALNUT

THE figure in walnut is caused by the annual growth ring and by irregular or wavy grain of the wood. The growth ring is the annual addition of wood to the circumference of the tree. Each ring of growth is discernible because the minute, but visible pores or tubes are relatively large and numerous in the "spring" wood, and smaller and fewer in the "summer" wood. In Figure 7 the relative size and distribution of these pores are shown in cross section where they appear as dots. In Figure 9, which is cut with the grain, the pores show as fine lines. In Figure 8 the pores show as short dashes due to diagonal cutting.

In addition to the figure produced by the annual rings, for this figure is always present in any piece of walnut, much of the wood selected for veneer has irregular or wavy grain. These irregularities may be small, but the most is made of them in the cutting by the skillful veneer man, with the result that these irregularities show "figure" on the flat surface of the veneer. The little pores in the wood are chiefly responsible for this figure. If the knife passes through wavy wood, in places it will follow the pores and they appear as long fine lines. Where these pores turn the least bit, the knife quickly cuts through them on a short diagonal and they appear on the surface as dots or dashes. Examination of a highly figured piece of walnut will show an alternate series of fine lines and short dashes or dots. These series of lines and dots and dashes reflect the light very differently and give the wood its depth of color and richness of figure.

In Figures 1 to 6 are shown the more typical of the figures found in walnut. It must be remembered, however, that no two logs ever produce identically the same figure. In fact, one of walnut's greatest charms is the ever different but ever beautiful appearance of the wood cut from each tree. The decorative value of walnut veneers has made possible the beautiful designs of modern furniture. It eliminates the need of expensive carving and ornamentation. Combined with correct and well proportioned lines, it has given modern furniture a grace and beauty never before attained in the history of furniture.

HOW TO IDENTIFY WALNUT

IN DESCRIBING the grain and figure of walnut in the foregoing paragraphs, we have given the principal means of distinguishing walnut from other woods. Fortunately, for the person with little knowledge of woods, walnut is rather easy to identify. From a practical standpoint the matter is further simplified because relatively few woods are used in furniture, and still fewer as substitutes for walnut. The means of identifying walnut are the pores, the figure and the color; and of these, the pores are the most important. In the first place walnut pores are found throughout the annual ring. This distinguishes it from such woods as oak, ash, elm; all of which have large pores and have them only in the "spring" wood, or inner part of the annual ring. The principal substitute for walnut is red gum, and the pores in gum are too small to be seen with the unaided eye. Gum veneers are seldom if ever substituted for walnut veneer, but on such large surfaces the lack of pores and of depth and richness of grain is easily detected. Fortunately, the principal substitution of gum for walnut is in the solid parts of furniture, such as legs, posts, rails, and mouldings. Here only plain walnut would be used, therefore the substitution is less conspicuous. However, the pores will identify real walnut. Birch is frequently finished to appear as walnut, and if heavily stained is difficult to detect. But the pores of birch though faintly visible, are so much smaller than the pores in walnut that, after a comparison of samples is made, it is easy to decide that a piece is not walnut, even though its definite classification as birch may be more difficult.

The furniture man runs into the greatest difficulties in detecting several of the various kinds of commercial mahoganies when they are finished as walnut and used in solid parts in connection with walnut veneers. They have pores about the size of those in walnut and similar in distribution. However, the annual rings are usually less distinct in these woods as they grow in the tropics and the grain may have a twisted, braided, or woven effect not seen in walnut. These different tropical woods are of so many different species and vary so within the species that no one rule will apply to all of them. Walnut being a single species of tree, the wood has a uniformity in texture, weight, and grain that can be easily recognized with a little practice.

Figure in walnut, is, next to the pores, the best method of identifying walnut. While the variety of figure in walnut is endless, most of it is distinctly walnut type and seldom seen in other woods. Color is a very valuable means of identifying walnut in an unfinished state, but this means is seldom available to the furniture man. Walnut is used almost entirely on the exposed surfaces so there is no place that is not finished or where a little finish may be scraped off. The dark greyish to reddish brown of walnut wood makes unfinished walnut the easiest of all cabinet woods to identify. As a last resort, a portion of the finish may be removed and this method of identification will always settle the case.

WHY WALNUT IS FINISHED

THE fundamental reason why cabinet woods are finished is to seal the surface of the wood, which prevents absorption of moisture that is responsible for shrinking, swelling, warping or checking. While walnut is less subject to such changes than other cabinet woods, nevertheless it must be remembered that the furniture of a single factory may be shipped to all parts of the United States and be subjected to widely varying heat and moisture conditions; therefore, a good finish that seals the surface is always desirable.

The finish also guards against decay and insect attacks, although walnut is singularly free from such enemies. The finish on walnut also serves to bring out the beautiful texture and figure. It also makes it possible to have as light or as dark a shade of walnut brown as is desired or such contrasting effects as we note in "two tone" finishes.

HOW TO SELECT A WALNUT FINISH

IN A majority of cases it is well to choose what is known as the natural walnut finish when it comes to color. Extremely light color must be obtained by a bleaching and unless desired for matching something else, is not recommended. Very dark finishes are not desirable because to obtain them it is necessary to darken the wood with stains which, if too dark, conceal the natural beauty of the color and figure of the wood. The best shades are the natural color and the very slightly darker shades that display the natural beauty of the wood. Very dark finishes make the identification of the walnut more difficult.

There are two styles of finish to be considered in addition to the consideration of color. These are known as the "polished" and "dull" finishes. The advantage of the high polish is that it displays the beauty of the wood to the very greatest advantage, giving it a very rich appearance. The disadvantage lies in the fact that such finish may be more easily marred. The dull finish if not made too dark can be very rich in appearance while it is much less subject to damage and can be repaired more easily if damaged.

Talking Points for Salesmen

Describing the "Perfect Cabinet Wood"

WALNUT is today, as it has been through the ages, a treasured wood for furniture and woodwork. Housewives are proud of their walnut furniture.

The natural color of real walnut, and the pleasing variety of its figure and grain, give such warmth and life to furniture and woodwork that even the simplest walnut designs have a distinctive elegance all their own. By scientific tests walnut combines moderate weight with maximum strength—making it the perfect cabinet wood.

Properly made walnut furniture never becomes warped, loose or rickety, because it is the most unchanging and stable of cabinet woods, a fact that leads to its almost universal use for aeroplane propellers and gun-stocks.

Walnut, for hundreds of years in Europe and America, has been the cabinet wood used by famous furniture makers and architects and has always occupied a prominent place in the finest homes and palaces.

Walnut is a real "heirloom" wood. Its remarkable qualities have preserved for the fine furniture of the past and will make the furniture of today the treasures of a future generation. Its resale value is always good. Old walnut furniture is prized by collectors.

Walnut has a beautiful natural brown color that is deep, warm and living. The color is in the wood and not on the wood. Hence, dents and scratches do not show up another color to spoil the effect, while age only enhances its beauty and increases its value.

Walnut has an endless variety of figure. The plain wood has a quiet dignity, the stripe and roll figures are distinctive, the mottles, ripple marks and matched figures are strikingly beautiful and each piece has a truly individual pattern of beauty.

Walnut always takes a fine finish, and is the easiest of all woods to keep looking well. Housewives know it is the easiest wood to keep clean.

Walnut is strong. Comparative strength tests by the United States Government show its superior qualities. It is universally specified for aeroplane propellers and gun-stocks, where the greatest stability is required.

Walnut, because of its close, even grain, is easily worked into the most artistic designs that furniture builders have produced. It is the accepted wood for carved furniture as well as the most delicate styles.

Walnut furniture is not so expensive as most inexperienced buyers imagine. Because of its splendid traditions, people are prone to overestimate its cost.

Butternut or White Walnut

Lighter in Color and Weight

BUTTERNUT, sometimes called white walnut, grows in the northeastern quarter of the United States and southeastern Canada. The trees are usually quite small and little lumber and no veneers reach the furniture industry. The wood is lighter in color and weight than American walnut and it is usually a plain wood. However, it is a beautiful and serviceable wood and it takes a fine finish.

Royal or Persian Walnut

Little Used in America

THIS species of walnut, originally native to Persia, spread through the centuries to Europe. It produces the "English walnuts" of commerce. It is called Circassian, Turkish, Russian, Italian, French, or English walnut, according to the country in which it is grown. "English walnuts" are now grown on the Pacific Coast but little or none of the wood is used commercially. Very little of the European wood finds its way to America except in foreign-made furniture and much of this is made of the American species. The variety known as "Circassian" from South Russia, where it grows as a gnarled and stunted tree, due to climatic or soil conditions, produces highly figured veneers, which were popular in America a few years ago. Highly figured stumpwood of American walnut has now superseded Circassian in American furniture.

An Open Letter to the Industry

Gentlemen:

Within the short period of three or four years we have witnessed the development of an idea which was fostered at first only by the belief and whole-hearted enthusiasm of comparatively few.

We have seen the phenomenal expansion of an idea into a definite plan embracing the interests of all whose welfare it may touch.

From the nucleus of this very modest beginning, the American Homes Bureau has become one of the most important and influential units of a great and growing industry.

From its inception the basic principle of the movement has been undeniably altruistic, although not entirely devoid of selfish interest. Any plan which purposes to benefit a definite group cannot be said to be entirely disinterested in its motives. But in this case the group was almost limitless and peculiarly, the exploited as well as the exploiter, has been immeasurably benefited by the movement.

Organized when our country was passing through a transitory stage following a great upheaval, it served to direct public attention to one of the greatest fundamental needs in stabilizing American life—better homes. National and State executives have highly commended its objective and acknowledge it as praise-worthy in its every aspect.

The American Homes Bureau is a clearing house for all the varied interests which represent the homes furnishing industry. It is the only means by which diverse interests can be co-ordinated. It stands so far removed from any special interests that all can deal with it with equal candor and confidence.

The program which the Bureau is following is most comprehensive, covering every phase of the industry. Its aims and objects have ever been to create and maintain a keener interest in, and a greater desire for better home furnishings of every kind. The public mind had been diverted from home fundamentals by many new luxuries outside the home—the automobile, movies, sports, etc. Surplus incomes were easily attracted into one of these new channels by the tremendous force of advertising and publicity which introduced the new commodities and kept them constantly before the public. It was quite obvious that a similar force had to be used against this invasion into the buying power upon which the very growth of our industry so greatly relied. Publicity of the highest order which would recover lost ground and build for a greater future.

One of the outstanding achievements of the Bureau is its phenomenal success in selling its idea to the newspapers of the country. Publishers eagerly accepted its newspaper service, which has been syndicated for more than two years, reaching millions of readers daily and weekly.

Another important phase of the Bureau's work is the Better Homes shows which have been so successfully conducted in the larger cities securing an overwhelming amount of publicity for the wholesale, as well as for the retail interests. Furniture has undoubtedly been given more publicity in the past two or three years than in all the preceding years since furniture ceased to be a luxury denied to all except royalty and the aristocracy. It has aroused interest where only indifference previously existed, and a tremendous latent market has been developed.

Work of such magnitude cannot be sustained without revenue, and out of this need has been conceived the idea of the American Homes Bureau Reference Book. Investment in the Reference Book will serve a double purpose for all who are represented in it. It constitutes a profitable medium of advertising to the retail trade and a permanent source of income for the Bureau's work.

Co-operation in this great and far reaching plan will unify the work and interest of the entire industry. Every dollar realized for the fund will be directed toward furthering the cause of better home furnishings, the benefits from which will be cumulative to one and all alike.

The Reference Book is another milestone marking the progress of an earnest organization, the American Homes Bureau, dedicated to the cause of Better Homes.

Yours very truly,

President.

American gumwood also has a beautiful and distinctive pattern in its figured wood, and is frequently used as a surface wood, finished natural or otherwise. Today, however, it finds its greatest range of use, as far as furniture is concerned, in connection with other hardwoods used for surfaces, as a wood of unsurpassed structural properties.

forest products. It is found growing from Connecticut to eastern Texas following a range south of the Ohio River. In the Carolina forests the average growth is about 100 feet in height and 15 inches in diameter at 50 years of age. It is most numerous, however, and attains its largest growth in the lower Mississippi Valley hardwood bottom lands, the maximum size being about 150 feet in height and 5 feet in diameter. In summer the gum is distinguished by large glossy star-shaped leaves, while in the fall its coloring is unexcelled in gorgeousness even by the maples. Its graceful yet sturdy symmetry is enhanced by masses of scarlet, orange and yellow leaves, changing to the bronze and purple tones characteristic of the autumn dress of the ash. Some idea of the extent of growth of this important tree may be gained from the fact that with the exception of the oaks, gum exceeds all other hardwoods, more than three times ash or maple, two and a half times hickory, many times elm and somewhat more than cypress.

finest cabinet woods. It stands today proudly on its own feet—as gumwood.

Here is a wood that possesses beauty, adaptability and fine working qualities, with a figure delicate as satin and of a pleasing character peculiarly its own. It is one of Nature's riddles to account for the pattern in figured red gum. Some trees have it; some not. Undoubtedly the soil and the situation of the individual tree in some mysterious way affects the structure of the wood. Whether quarter or plain sawn, certain gum logs show a figure, from which fact they are classed as figured gum. This figure ramifies through the wood at random, obeying no known laws.

Legs, frame, and mirror supports of gumwood.

Gumwood for solid parts permits extra value in design, construction, finish, and surface woods used.

Because of imperfect kiln drying in the early days, gumwood twisted and warped, and gum veneer performed strange antics disconcerting to the cabinet maker and users of interior trim. This has been overcome by modern methods, the result of painstaking investigations by forestry bureaus and manufacturers into the peculiar properties of the wood. Its great economic value is fully recognized, now that difficulties in seasoning have been overcome. Its use is wide, befitting a product that averages 33% of the entire hardwood production in the four states of Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana, and Tennessee.

In interior trim, figured American gumwood displays its natural distinctive patterns. The choicest figures are eagerly sought to adorn our finest interiors. The beauty of gumwood doors adapts itself to the scheme of interior decoration adopted.

Available in wide boards averaging 10 inches and up, in lengths from 14 to 16 feet, it has the following unique advantage over other hardwoods. It is a characteristic of figured gumwood that the pattern is continuous. When cut into veneers, the figure will absolutely match in sufficient panels to decorate entire rooms without variation.

This feature may be safely said to be exclusive with gumwood. The handsome interior shown on the page preceding illustrates the wonderful effects obtained. Note that the pattern of the matched figured veneer over the fireplace and elsewhere is continuous, and exactly duplicating, wherever used.

There is no question as to the beauty of gumwood. No question as to its remarkable serviceableness. For both interior trim and furniture, its use is established. And there can be no question as to the complete acceptance of American gumwood on the part of the public, once its qualities are presented. Reasonable cost is in its favor, out of all proportion to its intrinsic beauty and worth.

The Gumwood Service Bureau, Memphis, Tenn., an organization of independent and competing gum lumber producers, has now begun to tell the public about gumwood. Advertisements, dealing with the use of gumwood in furniture and for interior trim, are now appearing in leading national publications.

For further information, write the Bureau. Gumwood experts will gladly assist any one interested in this important wood.

Beautiful Birch

Has won its place as fine Cabinet Wood

NORTHERN HEMLOCK AND HARDWOOD MFRS. ASSN.
Oshkosh, Wis.

BEAUTIFUL BIRCH has won its recognized place as a fine cabinet wood because of its special qualities. The first quality that must be possessed by a cabinet wood is beauty and it is the attractive finished appearance of birch which has given it its common name, "Beautiful Birch." A birch board or veneered panel, sanded smooth but unfinished, is a beautiful thing in itself. It is without coarse pores or startling variations of shade. It has a characteristic grain which softly reveals the beauty of wood structure in those subdued effects now preferred by careful decorators.

And birch is not a one-color wood. In the hands of skillful finishers, it will show with great perfection any finish, in the light or dark tones, natural or stained. As a basis for white enamel it has no superior, on account of its very smooth and very hard surface. This extreme hardness of birch is another quality which makes it prized as a cabinet wood. Hardness in the wood of which furniture is made is not of prime importance in determining the appearance of a newly finished article but it is of very great importance in determining how long that appearance will be retained when the article is in service. Birch is nearly as hard as Hard Maple or Rock Elm and there are no native cabinet-woods harder than these. And so birch is pre-eminent in its resistance to every-day wear and to those frequent minor accidents leading to dents and abrasions in surfaces which are not as hard as birch. With this hardness, birch has great strength. No prominent American hardwood, not even Hard Maple, exceeds birch in the various tests worked out by the U. S. Forest Products Laboratory to show the strength of wood under bending strains, or impact, or compression parallel to the grain. These splendid strength qualities mean that in cabinet work the wood takes and holds fine clear-cut edges permitting of tight-fitting joints. This extreme hardness and density of the wood guarantees that all screws, metal fastenings, dowels or fitted wood joints will hold tightly, rigidly and perfectly. In the soft, light hardwoods such long time service is not possible under daily use.

In Colonial days skilled designers worked with such native woods as Maple, White Pine and Oak; and with Cherry and Birch, which were scarcer and had special cabinet wood qualities. Along with these they used much imported Mahogany. Many rare old pieces are of Maple, Cherry, or Birch. In the design of Maple and Mahogany pieces in the old days, rich contrasts of color were obtained where the Maple was finished natural and used with the dark colored Mahogany. On the other hand, Birch, Cherry and Mahogany were often finished in the same shades.

These woods all stand on their own merits as they are high-class cabinet woods. Each has certain points of superiority. Before the virtues of Birch were widely known by the consuming public, a quarter of a century ago, birch was sometimes sold under other names. Today it is so well known as a select cabinet wood that it is prized for itself alone, and owners of birch furniture take just pride in it.

While birch is found at various points in the North, from the New England states to the Mississippi River, it is in Wisconsin and Michigan that it reaches its best development.

This tree thrives in the great Northern Hardwood Forests of the Lake States and it is in this region that hardwood lumber manufacturing processes for handling this wood in the manner which it deserves have been perfected. It is here that it grows in dense, hard, smooth grain, giving the finest results under finishing processes. The Northern hardwood mills of Wisconsin and Michigan have the best of modern equipment for manufacturing, seasoning and kiln-drying this splendid wood.

Due to the fact that there are several species of birch, some people have confused the cabinet wood birch with the paper birch. The latter is a different tree, the lumber of which is used in making woodenware, novelties, spools, etc. The cabinet wood birch, commonly called Yellow Birch or Sweet Birch by botanists, is found chiefly in Wisconsin and Michigan. These two states produce over two-thirds of the annual cut of birch lumber. Yellow birch and sweet birch may be considered in the same class. Their properties are very similar, and no distinction is made between them in the trade or in use. Slivery surface and cross grain are practically unknown in birch. It excels for turned parts because it does not break out, has a smooth, even grain which does not rough up, and is otherwise in an advantageous position with respect to woodworking qualities. The wood contains no natural hard crystals which dull your tools.

The mechanical, physical and appearance properties of birch are such that it is the chosen wood for many exacting uses. Out of one hundred and thirty-four representative uses of all the commercial woods in the United States, this one wood finds place in nearly one-half. Birch is much prized for interior woodwork, and many of the finest homes and public buildings are finished in birch.

The wide range of stains which this wood will take, from light to dark, permits a choice of a delicately grained wood suited to various schemes of Interior Decoration. Its strength and hardness guarantee it will retain its finished appearance.

It is true that the wide range of shades and color tones has made it usual to show the natural grain of the wood; nevertheless, much beautiful painted and enameled furniture has been made of birch on account of the very smooth, hard surface which it presents. This permits a paint or enamel finish of the highest type and of lasting beauty.

A handsome little booklet issued by Stickley Brothers Company of Grand Rapids, tells of their Chromewald finish on birch, presenting the following interesting statements:

"The best things that we know of today in furniture are brought down to us from the past either as tangible objects or as an inspiration. The requisites of a piece of furniture in historical periods were usefulness and beauty. In this modern and extremely practical age, this principle has not changed in the least. Modern science has replaced old methods but not the principle. It has added to the store of experience. One of the greatest and most wonderful additions in this direction is Chromewald.

"In the last few years a movement has swept this country for reproducing antique effects so much admired on old masterpieces, especially those of the Renaissance, and a variety of methods have been applied in the using of paints, stains and gilding. Some of the results have been very beautiful but none of them very useful. The eighteenth and nineteenth century processes of French polishing or the oil treatment and rubbing of wood were very laborious and out of the question in this day of expensive materials and labor. The effects produced by these old methods are beautiful and lasting and age improved them. We find some very exquisite pieces of early Colonial work of this kind in the Russell Sage collection at the Metropolitan Museum of New York, such as small tables and chairs made of birch, maple and cherry. Age and use have given these pieces a wonderful warm brown color and a very unusual texture.

"The Chromewald finishes are reproducing these old effects . . ."

You will see "Beautiful Birch" not only in fine furniture, in reproductions of Colonial pieces and in the woodwork of the better homes and public buildings, but also a great deal of birch is used in the manufacture of high-class cabinets and display-cases for show-rooms in stores, and in fact in all classes of interior store-fixtures, where a handsome wood surface is desired. Architects frequently specify birch flooring with birch woodwork where they wish to obtain fine, definite effects, and when the entire room must melt into a well-chosen color plan. Birch flooring has a slightly reddish tone and is so hard that it renders excellent service. Clear red birch gives a floor of a rich, warm tint. And so the initiated like birch for furniture, floors and woodwork.

When the birch log is cut into lumber or veneers, the boards or panels of several classes with respect to appearance, are made available for the choice of the cabinet-worker. "Unselected" birch is a mixture of two beautiful shades, one slightly reddish (the heartwood), and one of a creamy color (the sapwood). Red birch is all or nearly all heartwood and is sorted out for this color. It is not another species. For this reason it costs somewhat more than the unselected. The unselected birch is used where a contrasting effect is desired in the natural finish. It is used for remarkably fine and unusual effects in veneer work, always under paint or enamel, and, finally, wherever any of the darker stains such as the browns, Colonial reds or antique finishes are used. Birch is peculiar, in that the reddish and creamy tones of the natural wood absorb stains so uniformly that all differences of natural color are uniformly covered by the darker stains when unselected birch is used.

"Curly" birch is a special grade and commands a premium. Only here and there in the forest is there a tree that contains this beautiful, wavy grained, "changeable silk" variety of wood. In all the range of beautiful hardwoods there is nothing which surpasses "curly" birch for delicate and satisfying beauty. For drawer fronts, table tops, and similar conspicuous parts of furniture, "curly" birch is much prized.

Red birch, or the selected cuts from the reddish heart-wood of the tree, is used where the richest and most uniform effects are desired in the natural finish or under certain strains, and both the red birch and the unselected birch have the same wide variety of figure from a mere delicate tracery to the very ornamental growths.

Making beautiful birch into veneer enhances its beauty and heightens its figure or grain. Rotary-cut veneer panels are even stronger and more permanent than pieces of solid wood. Rotary-cut birch veneer does not check or crack along the grain, while the figure of the wood is brought out in an attractive, characteristic pattern. In these panels will be found a wide variety of effects to choose from, as is true in all birch. Birch is one of the few hardwoods which shrinks about as much in one direction as another, that is, in radial line, or perpendicular to the grain. This is one of the remarkable things about this wood which made it a choice in Government specifications for aeroplane propellers. Birch does not warp, split or twist. It stays put, and the finished piece remains a credit to its designer and manufacturer, and a source of definite and permanent satisfaction to its owner. The texture of the wood is firm and the grain does not rise, and neither are there those minute open pores that after a time absorb the finish and make it shabby looking; nor does its wood contain any of those peculiar, natural chemicals which in time rise and discolor a paint or enamel finish as on some other hardwoods. Some of the shades in which "Beautiful Birch" is finished are:

1. Natural or Golden.
2. Silver or Pearl Gray.
3. Colonial Dark Red.
4. Nut Brown.
5. Autumn Brown.
6. Summer Green.
7. Amber.
8. Ivory Enamel.

9. White Enamel.
10. French Gray Enamel.
11. Chromewald.

One of the most characteristic features of birch-wood is its high, natural, lustre which imparts to it a soft, satiny appearance. Some selected panels in the Yale University selection of cabinet-woods are similar to the mythical "satin-wood" in this respect and have a rich, golden color and wavy grain. A prominent manufacturer of wood finishes stated, "We have never known of any difficulty in finishing birch, provided right methods and materials are used. In our own sample department we finish a great many thousand feet of this wood with splendid results and our finishers find that it takes finishing material very well. As to the permanency of finished birch, we have panels in our finishing department which were finished eight or nine years ago and the finish is just as beautiful today as when first applied."

On account of its hardness birch takes a very high polish. It is not a "common" wood in the furniture trade, probably only about five or six per cent of the requirements of this industry being met by birch. It is not "common" in stock patterns.

Beautiful specimens of "Curly" birch. Only here and there in the forests is there a tree that contains this beautiful, wavy grained, "changeable silk" variety of wood, much prized for drawer fronts, table tops and similar conspicuous parts of furniture.

Mahogany the King

Has Romantic History

1138 Broadway, New York City

Mahogany, because of its intimate association with our own homes, and with cherished memories of earlier homes in which childhood days were spent, is a subject near to our hearts. Many of us have and still use the old mahogany furniture that graced those earlier homes—many, indeed, still live in those same homes, with their mahogany woodwork mellow with age. We know, therefore, that while mahogany, with its rare beauty, converts a house into a home, there is a thoroughly practical side to its possession as shown by the fact that it has faithfully served generations now gone and will serve generations yet to come.

An interesting and romantic history surrounds the discovery of this most noted and beloved of cabinet woods. It is told that Sir Walter Raleigh, in 1597, on one of his journeys to the then almost unknown western world, put into a sheltered bay in the West Indies to seek materials to repair his vessels. The simple natives pointed out the trees from which timber could be produced that would endure under the stress of the perilous homeward voyage. These were felled, wrought into planks and placed in the decks of his ships.

After his return to England, Sir Walter invited his Queen to visit his ships. During her inspection she admired the beautiful strange red-brown wood used to repair the decks, whereupon he ordered the mahogany planks removed from his ship and fashioned into a table for Queen Elizabeth. Thus mahogany came to grace the chamber of a great queen and in one stride take pre-eminence among the cabinet woods of the world.

Thackeray said that the eighteenth century brought England three blessings—"Peace, Chippendale and Mahogany." The quotation is interesting as showing the high esteem in which mahogany was held even in the early days.

MAHOGANY—THE TREE

The mahogany tree grows in tropical jungles, with its crown of foliage high above its fellows. It is tall, straight, dignified. Solitary it stands and overlooks its own race. Lush jungle life is all about it. Parasitic, hawserlike vines coil about the less sturdy trees struggling upward, crushing out their lives and bearing them to earth, to become lost in the mould that in turn feeds other trees.

Amid this welter of plant life the mahogany tree is King. Many are found well over a hundred feet high, with a clear, clean, straight trunk to where it crotches into the first of its great branches, sixty or more feet above the ground.

Except for a small quantity in the Florida everglades, unavailable because of its location, no Genuine Mahogany grows in the United States and all that we have is imported from three widely separated tropical sources. The first of these is Mexico, Honduras, Guatemala, Nicaragua and other Central American States and parts of South America; the second is the Nigerian, Gold and Ivory coasts of West Africa; and the third is the West Indian Islands, principally Cuba and Santo Domingo.

Woods from no other sources are recognized as genuine in the trade.

Since individual trees must be sought from amongst a great mass of other vegetation, the man seeking it, known as a "cruiser," climbs the highest mahogany tree he can find and from its top, with field glasses, makes note of the other mahogany tree tops he can see from his commanding perch. If his inspection shows that the number is sufficient, the cutters are brought up, and the work is begun. The first effort is directed to clearing the jungle growth from around the selected trees, and cutting a rough trail to the nearest water course. The actual work of clearing and cutting down the tree is performed largely by natives armed with heavy bladed machetes and axes.

In Central America, Mexico and the West Indies, mahogany logs are usually dragged out of the bush either by tractors or teams of oxen. In Africa the presence of the deadly tsetse fly prevents the use of draught animals, the tractor is not often employed, and the work is performed by troops of half-clad natives to whom the steaming jungle is home.

Arriving at the selected water course, the logs must await the first freshet to carry them down to the sea. With the coming of the rainy season and high water in the streams, they float down in great jams of logs, driftwood, limbs, branches and all the debris of the forest. Natives in dugout canoes follow to dislodge the logs that have not floated free.

While awaiting the arrival of the steamer, the logs are separated from the debris, securely lashed together in the form of rafts, and made ready to be towed out to the roadstead for loading.

Soon the great ship lies waiting to receive its precious cargo. Bustling tugboats now assume the burden, and the rafts move slowly out to the vessel, ridden through the rough waters by skilled raftsmen. This accomplished the logs, singly, or in twos and three, are cut loose from the rafts, hoisted aboard ship and skillfully stowed away deep in the hold so they will not shift en route.

This is dangerous, exciting work, because it usually is done in the open sea and the logs frequently weigh 20,000 lbs. or more. Ultimately, however, loading is complete and clearance papers signed. A few crisp orders, a bell tinkles far down in the engine room and 500,000 or perhaps 1,000,000 board feet of mahogany logs are on their way to the waiting mills in this country.

MAHOGANY BEAUTIFUL

All genuine mahogany, lumber and veneers, regardless of origin, are divided into two classes, with reference to the surface appearance. These classes are plain and figured.

Considerable confusion exists as to the word figure. Figure has nothing to do with grain. The grain of wood is produced, partially, by the size and character of its pores and fibres, and partially by the lines of demarcation between periods of growth, known in temperate zone woods as annular growth rings. While mahogany is a tropical tree and grows practically continuously, it has these latter grain markings to some extent on both plain and figured surfaces.

Figure, on the other hand, is produced in mahogany by the interlocking and interlacing of the wood fibres which twist and curl so that, when manufactured into lumber or veneers, some are seen from one angle and some from another, producing that play of light and shade known as figure. It can readily be seen that these growth convolutions which, usually extend through several periods of growth, could never be twice alike and, therefore, that every piece of figured mahogany is individual.

Notwithstanding this diversity there are certain characteristics of figure that enable those in the trade to establish types, or names under which figured mahogany is sold. These number over twenty, of which a few typical examples will be described.

"Plain"—has no surface markings except those produced by the tree's growth and known as grain.

"Stripy Figure"—means that the surface is broken into ribbon-like stripes of fairly uniform width, lengthwise with the grain.

"Broken Stripe"—means that the irregular stripes twist and tumble, come to the surface and disappear, in a play of light and shade that produces a satisfying individuality.

"Mottle"—in its various forms, means that the surface of the wood looks as though the tree had met with some cataclysm of nature that boldly forced the fibres into great confusion, pushing them sideways and producing countless splashes of light and shade that mingle in a kaleidoscopic riot of figure effect.

"Rain-drop"—in some ways is similar to a combination of Mottle and Broken Stripe. The interruptions in the Broken Stripe figure are sudden and positive, giving the effect of rain splashes driven by a high wind.

"Fiddle-back"—is named from the fine, curly, rippling figure seen on the backs of rare old violins. It is like the effect of a gentle summer breeze on a placid pond where one tiny wavelet follows another in a procession of ripples. Fiddleback is a typical, well-named and distinctive variety of figured mahogany.

"Crotch"—High up in the air, in the trunk of a mahogany tree, a silent but intense struggle takes place among the fibres in the attempt of each to follow its own inclination in determining to which of the great branches overhead it shall pledge its allegiance and support. Consequently the fibres cross, twist and tumble in a swirl that when manufactured into veneer, produces the most highly figured mahogany of all—the "Crotch" figure so well known and so long used.

Mahogany contains more variety of figure than any other cabinet wood. No two pieces are alike, each is as individual as the human face. In each new combination new lights, new beauties may be discovered every day. That is why mahogany is never tiresome; why it is so treasured and one reason at least, why it has been and still is the King of Cabinet Woods.

ECONOMICAL MAHOGANY

Mahogany has many characteristics to recommend it other than its supreme beauty. No cabinet wood has more durability and stability. This is proven by your possession and every day use of furniture and interior woodwork that your ancestors cherished.

Mahogany does not deteriorate with age, while time and light develop and enhance its beauty, transparency and color, provided they have not been permanently hidden by the injudicious use of stain and finish.

Mahogany fits into practically any color scheme, if due attention is given to stain and finish. The very dark highly polished surfaces at present in vogue should be superseded by simple, light-colored stains and easily applied top coats that display, rather than obscure, its beauty.

Mahogany does not require intricate designs or elaborate carving. Its simple figured surface is in itself a decoration that lends dignity and charm to any room, whether used for furniture interior woodwork or both.

Mahogany, contrary to general belief, is not expensive or hard to work with tools. Its use is a real economy when its long life and durability are considered.

There is a somewhat general belief that there is a scarcity of mahogany. Such is not the case. The average annual importation is fifty million board feet, while the forest supply is ample for generations to come. Genuine mahogany furniture is being made and offered in constantly increasing quantity. Do not, therefore, be misled by statements to the contrary. Fortunately, too, designers of furniture are again turning to the styles made immortal by the master craftsmen of long ago.

MAHOGANY—SOLID OR VENEER

Two kinds of mahogany surfaces are used in construction—veneered surfaces (known as plywood) and solid mahogany. In veneered work, a core is built up of pieces of commoner wood, such as chestnut, pine, birch, gum or poplar, thoroughly glued together and dried. On the surfaces of this core, mahogany veneers are glued. Solid mahogany is what the name implies—the exposed surfaces of the whole article are made of mahogany lumber.

There are many places, such as large, flat surfaces, or those curving one way only, where veneered work is undoubtedly superior and often more expensive than solid wood. On the other hand for table and chair legs, rails, slats, pieces curved two or more ways and similar situations, solid wood is preferable and, in many cases, necessary.

The best figured portions of logs are usually selected for veneers. Therefore, if you wish highly figured furniture your choice would naturally be a veneered piece. Veneered furniture is first class furniture, if the work has been thoroughly done and good glue has been used. All the old master craftsmen used veneers where good judgment indicated, and their work has stood for centuries.

The same is true of interior woodwork. The best doors are veneered doors. On the other hand, solid wood is used for mouldings, stair treads and chair rails. Each type of construction has a legitimate place in furniture and interior woodwork and each should be used in that place.

USED BY GREAT CRAFTSMEN

Those master craftsmen of England most assuredly loved and appreciated mahogany. Chippendale wrote: "My mahogany ribband-backed chairs which, if I may speak without vanity, are the best I have ever seen, or perhaps have ever made." He specialized on chairs, although he also built beds, secretaries, desks, tables, cabinets, settees—every kind of furniture, all of genuine mahogany.

That Hepplewhite, Chippendale's successor in the furniture field, worked almost entirely in mahogany, conveys to us better than words he might have spoken, his love for the rich wood.

Sheraton, the last of the famous trio, speaks repeatedly of Mahogany, the "royal wood" in his Drawing Book, which is still consulted by furniture designers all over the world. He unstintingly praised mahogany, because it will not shrink nor warp and has such beauty of pattern and grain. In his inlay work the dull yellow of tulipwood and satinwood gleams like gold from the mellow undertone of the mahogany in which it lies. He also writes: "Of all woods, mahogany is the best suited to furniture where strength is demanded. It works up easily, has a beautiful figure and polishes so well that it is an ornament to any room in which it may be placed."

In Colonial America mahogany seemed to be the most appropriate wood for the prevalent styles. Duncan Phyfe paid extravagant prices for choice mahogany logs. The hundreds of skilled artisans who plyed their trade all through the colonies early realized that this wood was superior because its marked degree of beauty and tone was so well combined with its ability to withstand wear.

THE CARE OF MAHOGANY

In recent years much mahogany has been finished with a very dark, almost black color, covered by a highly polished varnish surface. What chance has a beautiful wood like mahogany to grow richer, more fully figured, or more transparent of surface when so mistreated?

Another undesirable color is the flaring dark red seen on some furniture. Mahogany that has aged properly isn't that color any more than it is nearly black. Properly treated, mahogany should be a light color when you buy it—that age gives it that soft mellow tone that has been likened to the color of rare old sherry wine, with a transparent surface splashed with light and shade.

The surface coats may be varnish, shellac, French polish, or lacquer, as you please. All of these will take a high polish, semi-polish, satin finish, eggshell finish or dull finish, depending on how the final coat has been rubbed. Individual taste must dictate which is desired. The less highly polished surfaces however do not so readily show the almost inevitable scratches and blemishes of service.

Wax and boiled linseed oil also are used for top coats. These have advantages worth noting. If the piece gets marred, the damage may be repaired by rubbing on, with a soft cloth, a little wax or oil, as the case may be. If wax, it should be rubbed to a soft lustrous surface after fifteen or twenty minutes, with a clean, soft cloth. The piece can then be used in a few hours. Boiled linseed oil, also applied sparingly with a cloth pad, takes longer to dry—usually three days. Hot dishes do not ring the surface finished with wax or oil, a fact which should appeal to the housekeeper.

A high polish is not possible with either wax or oil, but a high polish on either furniture or interior woodwork is not always desirable.

It is erroneously supposed by many that mahogany requires much care, that it gets murky, is hard to clean and scratches easily. These conditions occur, but they have nothing to do with mahogany—the wood doesn't get murky and scratched—it is the finish; and a given finish will get murky and scratch easily, regardless of the wood underneath it.

However, many have highly polished furniture and woodwork and should know how to take care of them easily. Secure from any hardware man a bottle filled with three-fourths crude oil and one-fourth benzine. Rub on sparingly with a piece of cheesecloth and then thoroughly polish lengthwise with the grain of the wood, with another piece of dry cheesecloth. The murk will disappear and so will many little scratches. Bear in mind, however, it is recommended only for varnish, shellac, French polish and lacquer—not for wax or boiled oil.

By Edgar A. Guest

From the Book of Verse, "A Heap o' Livin'," Copyrighted.

It takes a heap o' livin' in a house t' make it home,
A heap o' sun an' shadder, an' ye sometimes have t' roam
Afore ye really 'preciate the things ye lef' behind,
An' hunger fer 'em somehow, with 'em allus on yer mind.
It don't make any difference how rich ye get t' be,
How much yer chairs an' tables cost, how great yer luxury;
It ain't home t' ye, though it be the palace of a king, Until somehow yer soul is sort o' wrapped 'round everything.

Home ain't a place that gold can buy or get up in a minute;
Afore it's home there's got t' be a heap o' livin' in it;
Within the walls there's got t' be some babies born, an'
then
Right there ye've got t' bring 'em up t' women good, an' men;
An' gradjerly, as time goes on, ye find ye wouldn't part
With anything they ever used—they've grown into yer heart;
The old high chairs, the playthings, too, the little shoes they wore
Ye hoard; an' if ye could ye'd keep the thumbmarks on the door.

Ye've got t' weep t' make it home, ye've got t' sit an' sigh
An' watch beside a loved one's bed, an' know that Death is nigh;
An' in the stillness o' the night t' see Death's angel come
An' close the eyes o' her that smiled, an' leave her sweet voice dumb;
Fer these are scenes that grip the heart, an' when yer tears are dried,
Ye find the home is dearer than it was, an' sanctified;
An' tuggin' at ye always are the pleasant memories
O' her that was an' is no more—ye can't escape from these.

Ye've got to sing an' dance fer years, ye've got to romp an' play,
An' learn t' love the things ye have by usin' them each day;
Even the roses 'round the porch must blossom year by
Afore they 'come a part o' ye, suggestin' some one dear
Who used t' love 'em long ago, an' trained 'em jes' t' run
The way they do, so's they would get the early mornin' sun;
Ye've got t' love each brick an' stone from cellar up t' dome—
It takes a heap o' livin' in a house t' make it home.

Romance of Plywood and Veneer

NEW ALBANY VENEERING COMPANY

"ALL ROADS LEAD TO ROME," is ■ saying old but true,—and by the same token we may observe that the history of nearly every subject under the sun carries us straight back to the days of Egypt.

The story of plywood, veneer—and of veneered furniture is no exception.

Although it may surprise some of us it is actually true that the chests, beds, chairs and tables of the period of King Tut were de-plaited bottoms of linen cord; sometimes of fine art leather.

The backs of these ancient Egyptian chairs (the originals of the Empire Style in furniture) show elaborate figure work set into veneer.

The cabinets, embroidery stands or work boxes of the Queens of Egypt, were beautifully veneered, cross-banded and inlaid with marquetry of gold and lapis lazuli, showing again the superb handicraft of thousands of years ago.

And they were fond of cushions, too, in those comfortable days of yore as may be seen in one old Egyptian chair and foot rest.

It is impossible to reproduce the wonderfully harmonious and yet brilliant color tonal effects of these ancient pieces—with their beautiful restful blues and delicate greens enriched with gold, ivory, ebony and gems sparkling in relief against background seas of fine veneers.

Egypt was the mistress and the teacher of the world. All arts came from her—ceramics, painting, sculpture, architecture, textiles—even to the refinements of miladi's rouge and the dainty cult of the manicure. Egypt knew them all—taught them all. And after her came cruel Assyria and voluptuous Babylon, but their art was beautiful.

Furniture under those empires was also veneered—inlaid. The throne of Sennacharib was veneered with gold, ivory and ebony. Also we may reasonably suppose that the thrones of David and Solomon were no less so—as is also the "Chair of St. Peter" to this day preserved in the treasures of the Vatican at Rome.

All traces of Greek furniture of wood are lost, but we know from the paintings of old Athens that they too knew the art of veneering table tops, beds and even the arms of chairs.

Roman furniture was costly and magnificent. Roman taste despised solid block pieces ■ being essentially barbarian and crude. They loved the beautiful effects of "cross-cut veneers"; some of their table tops resembling "the spots of the leopard," others "a swarm of bees," some the "tawny lion," or the "stripes of the tiger."

Rome's greatest historian, Pliny, even went so far in his admiration of the veneerer's art as to denounce the over-use of gold and paint "because it covered up the beauty of the veneer."

"Cicero," he says, "paid $45,000 for ■ veneered table of citrus wood,"—and we have his historical statement of 2,000 years ago that the proudest possession of Caesar was a table beautifully veneered. If the reader wishes to follow this history more in detail, he will find it on page 195 of the 30th chapter of Book XIII, Pliny's Natural History, to be found in nearly every public library.

Speaking of veneers, another eminent authority says that "like the Egyptians, Assyrians and Greeks, the Romans used maple, beech, holly, olive, cedar, pine, ash and elm—veneered."

Besides this, the Romans used the famous Syrian terebinth and palm, veneers cut across, the root of the alder, horn and ivory, plain and stained; also tortoise shells.

Cedar Veneers of Crete, Africa and Syria were soaked in ocean water or steeped in oil of cedar to keep off the worms. The Romans had admirable glue also. Their veneer and other saws were set in frames and had the teeth turned in opposite directions to open the seams in the working of woods. Their planes and chisels were the planes and chisels of today.

A celebrated work "Ancient Furniture" declares that the veneering of the ancient Romans was not only universal but of superlative quality and excellence.

It is ■ point of interest, in passing, that the Romans reclined on cushions and couches at their meals. Their tables were not elevated like ours. The Egyptians, however, had many tables as we have them today, though probably not "dining tables."

Fine and beautiful caskets, used for burial of ancient Egyptian Kings, Queens and members of the Royal family, were veneered.

In the Ninth Egyptian Room of the Metropolitan Museum, New York City, may be found a particularly fine coffin of the period of the Twelfth Dynasty, in which was buried Nephthys, daughter of an Egyptian Monarch, also parts of the Coffin of Senebtisti, discidedly up-to-date in style and finish, even ■ compared with the latest and finest productions of the modern world.

Veneered Furniture from King Tut's tomb and from the tombs of many other Egyptian Kings have proven a veritable astonishment to the student of furniture.

A mural decoration or wall painting made 3,000 years before Christ, shows in detail how they made plywood forty-nine centuries ago. It was discovered in the tomb of Rekmara at Thebes, dating from the reign of Thothmes III, the Pharaoh of the Exodus described in the Bible.

There is the glue-pot over the fire, the workman planing down the surface of the base wood, another laying the fine veneer. There are bags of hot sand, the flat stone cauls—in short the whole story!

How many of us had imagined that veneering had any history at all? But it has—and a wonderful one, indeed.

As ■ fine art veneering goes back to the dawn of time. It was ages old when King Tut was born. Even the Egyptian war-boats were constructed of built-up veneers—plywood—layer on layer—and glued.

One of the world's greatest authorities tells us that the earliest Egyptians produced beautiful veneered furniture which has influenced the styles and practice of the craft ever since, "for veneering furniture," this writer says, "the Egyptians used various woods, ebony, cedar, acacia, etc."

Their glue was water-proof and well-nigh time-proof, for it is still "sticking everlastingly at it."

Wonderful Egyptian works of furniture art recently discovered, and unfortunately not published with detailed descriptions, are almost invariably veneered. Indeed, had they not been veneered it is improbable that they could have endured to the present time. They are the sole surviving specimens of the most ancient furniture known to man, and veneered.

The chair seats of "Old Rameses" had covered in the excavation made at Lisht. Both of these caskets ■ veneered—plywood construction.

During the Medieval Period, furniture was constructed almost exclusively of "solid oak," "solid walnut," "solid mahogany," etc. Massiveness and weight were the objects sought, rather than elegance of design or beauty of surface. A general heaviness of plank effects, almost immovable, "with carvings wide and deep" came weirdly into vogue. Even caricature and a leaning to the monstrous was a prevailing tendency; in one word—Gothic—of which one writer says, "It is scarcely possible to conceive anything more coarse and gross than the Goths, the Vandals and their cumbrous works."

"Bureau du Roi"—most beautiful and costly example of veneered work in existence.

The "Lost Treasure of Windsor"—Veneered plywood.

Veneering was well nigh a lost art in this dismal period of cultural reaction to the primitive and barbaric. It was the cubistic school of the semi-civilized. But time cures all things and out of this slough of despond, both spiritual and artistic, came the brilliant dawn of the Renaissance!

Sweeping up from Italy into France, Spain, Holland, Germany, and then England, this great revival of "human interest" found expression in much of the finest furniture the world has ever produced.

We must remember that the best in all furniture is essentially a reflex and outgrowth of this Renaissance "return to reason" influence.

And with it a revival of the structural use of plywood and the artistic sanction of veneer—

Now came the inevitable return to the classical art of the ancients—gradually softened and refined through the varying motives of cavaliers and moustaches, mermaids and garlands, heroics and Crusaders until the world once more awoke to a "realizing sense" that the natural beauty of wood, so commonly concealed by so-called "solid" construction, depends upon veneers for its highest and most brilliant accentuation. In a word, this marvelous revival period called the "Renaissance" beginning a century before Columbus and continuing well up to the Eighteenth, was the welcome herald of a natural return to the human side of life—a new appreciation of the truer things of every day, and a livable understanding and enjoyment of the world as it ought to be. This was the Renaissance.

The "lost treasure of Windsor" is a magnificent restored piece, of the period of William and Mary, dating back to 1685, resurrected from the debris of a neglected ruin in Hampton Court Palace and restored by the Warings. Elaborately veneered, it is considered a classic of the veneer's art. The body is of pine, veneered with ebony, chiefly, burr walnut and olive wood. The marquetry and scroll engraving in inlay of brass and other metals, adds to its embellishment. Note the circular panel of ebony veneer in the center, bearing the monogram of the royal pair. This is the classic piece described by Wild as the "Treasure of the King." It is still preserved at Windsor Castle.

To this monarch there also belonged the world famous "Dwarf Cabinet" overlaid with cross-cut veneers of laburnum wood.

Before attempting a few of the outstanding examples of so-called "perfect furniture"—the brothers Adam, Sheraton, Shearer, Chipendale and Hepplewhite—let us come at once to the climax of all furniture—the most magnificent piece in existence—the "Bureau du Roi"—the Bureau of the King.

This superb classic is still preserved intact, in the Palace of the Louvre, in Paris. It is the last word in the art of veneering—and a commentary upon our education that so few of us have realized—that the finest effects are brought into relief against softening backgrounds of fine veneer.

"The Bureau du Roi" was begun for Louis XV by Oeben in 1760, finished and signed by Jean Henri Riesener in 1769. It is a cylinder desk, five and one-half feet long and three feet deep, prototype of the "roll-tops" of our later days. Its decorations are done in magnificent marquetry of "flowers and trophies of poetry and of war." The bronze figures representing Apollo and Calliope were designed by Duplessi. One figure holds a branch bearing a clock with figures of little children dancing.

This most famous of all exhibits of plywood in furniture cost the King five hundred thousand francs and required nine years in the making.

It is beautifully veneered with the rarest of fine woods, in sumptuous designs and perhaps the most delicate and perfect inlays in the world.

The construction is of plywood throughout, in principle and in fact.

A superb classic by Shearer is the famous veneered "Sideboard of the Bank of England." According to Foley, this magnificent specimen of plywood construction at its highest and best is of the date of 1748.

It is richly veneered with satin wood. The length is 9 feet and the height 4 feet. One of the foremost furniture critics of all time, declared that "nothing can exceed the beauty of this celebrated piece."

No less celebrated throughout the "realm of good furniture" is the Sheraton veneered Bookcase, designed for, and still in the possession of the "London Times."

This famous classic, almost a sacred shrine to the devotee of fine furniture, is done in mahogany veneer—two centuries old, and more; but perfect today, intact, and beautiful in its pristine perfection—thanks to the art of plywood construction and of veneered surfacing as exemplified under the master hand of Sheraton himself.

In South Kensington Museum, London, you may see yet another Classic of this too little appreciated fine art of veneer and plywood, the beautiful writing desk, once the personal property of Marie Antoinette. Date 1780. It is veneered with tulip wood, inlaid with marquetry of kingwood, box and pale greens with ivory trim.

Deeply interesting also is another rescued treasure, once the proud possession of the same martyr Queen of the old French Royalty. A superb sideboard and knife cabinet—veneered in mahogany throughout, with ebony and satin wood banding. The plywood construction beneath the surface veneer is oak.

This rare example of the veneer's art was saved from the wreck of the French Revolution by no less redoubtable an American than our own General Knox and at the suggestion of Prince Talleyrand, brought to this country, where it is still shown as the "piece de resistance" of the historical museum of Portland, Maine.

After nearly two centuries of adventure, this classic still stands supremely beautiful and perfect in its mutely eloquent confirmation of the enduring qualities of plywood and veneer.

Napoleon's "Bureau de Campagne."

"Solid" pieces of such delicate design as these would in all human probability have warped themselves to oblivion long years ago. Steam heat is the death-warrant of

"solid" furniture; plywood and veneers are processed to resist it. Regulated treatment of heat, moisture and pressure have rendered them impervious and immune.

No more perfect specimen of rich walnut veneered furniture exists than the famous writing desk of Dean Swift. On this probably were indited the "Letters to Stella"; and also, in imagination, were described the scenes of Captain Gulliver's immortal Travels.

Coming now to America—what do we find of the great art of veneered furniture? Briefly, this: the desk of George Washington, here reproduced, was plywood built and veneered. He used this desk from 1789 to 1797. The facings are of satinwood veneer.

The desk on which Thomas Jefferson wrote the Declaration of Independence—was veneered. The Jefferson desk is now the property of the United States, purchased by Congress, April 23rd, 1880.

The desk of William Penn was likewise veneered, as was also that of Daniel Webster, preserved at Sudbury, Mass., in the Wayside Inn, recently purchased by Henry Ford.

To all of which, were a dramatic climax needed to demonstrate beyond quibble the "endurance test" of plywood and veneer, we may add the classic of classics—Napoleon's collapsible writing cabinet,—designed for him by Sacci of Florence—built to his specifications and which accompanied "The Little Corporal" from the end of Europe to the other, on the march, at the gallop, in "action" constantly upon the most famous battlefields of history.

It is plywood—faced with rosewood veneer, banded with copper inlay and bound with copper edges.

The tops are thin flats of green marble—polished. The central part of the desk, with shelves and drawers, rises automatically and brings out the three legged chair which is covered with red Morocco. Both desk and chair were intercollapsible. Both were veneered. Twenty years of military service—the most terrific on record and not a chip in them! What wonder that the grenadiers of the Old Guard called this wonderful and magnificent example of the endurance test of plywood and veneer—Napoleon's "bureau de campagne?"

How to Figure Mark-ups

A simple and safe method explained—
correct selling price is assured

THERE is a reason why some furniture stores are finding business rather hard sledding. There was a time when dealers charged for their furniture what they thought they could get. Cost of operation interested them not at all. In fact, they never considered this an important item in the management of a store. They made money in spite of themselves, in spite of unsatisfactory methods of setting up the selling price.

Education, scientific study and broad-minded merchants on the one side, and unheralded competition, beating down of prices by housewives, and inroads by other industries on the other, have forced furniture stores of today to save themselves by overhauling their methods of doing business.

Light is dawning upon the minds of the progressive merchants. They are beginning to learn that the unit of operation in a furniture store is the selling price. It is composed of three important items:

Cost of merchandise, including freight.
Cost of operation (overhead).
Net profit.

These three items must be used in determining the selling price of a commodity.

Cost of merchandise is the cost delivered to the store, or warehouse. Although some stores add the freight after mark-up has been added, the majority include it in the cost of merchandise, and all of them include it as part of the selling price.

Cost of operation, or overhead, is the entire expense incurred in conducting the retail business: salaries, wages, rent, light, heat, trucking, advertising, insurance, depreciation, loss by bad debts. Overhead is expressed in percentage of the cost of operation to the total sales of the year. Net profit is the sum left after payment for merchandise and overhead, and is expressed in a percentage of the selling price.

The following figures will illustrate the operations in a store during the year 1923:

Cost of merchandise	$65,550	57% of sales
Cost of operation	$4,500	30% of sales
Net profit	$14,950	13% of sales
Selling Price	$115,000	100% of sales

The average mark-up was 43% of the selling price, the overhead 30%, and the net profit 13%. The overhead for previous years was as follows:

1920	28%
1922	30%

(4) 120 (30%)

The average overhead over a period of four years was 30%. To calculate the 1924 selling prices, the overhead should equal 30% of the selling price, and if the profit of 1923 was satisfactory, the total markup should be 43% of the 1924 selling price. The selling price always is 100%. In this example, therefore, the cost of merchandise in 1924 must equal the difference, or 57% of the 1924 selling price.

Cost of merchandise	57%
Mark-up	43%
Selling Price	100%

To compute the selling price. The wrong way to compute it would be to apply the mark-up with the cost as a base.

1 desk (incl. freight)	$80.00
Mark-up (add 43% of cost)	$34.40
	$114.40

This mark-up is only 30% of the selling price.

The selling price is arrived at correctly as follows:

The necessary mark-up being 43% of selling price the cost of the desk ($80.00) is therefore 57% of the selling price.

$80.00 divided by 57 and multiplied by 100 gives $140.35, the correct selling price of the desk fully covering cost including freight, overhead and profit. By incorrect figuring, only 81% of the overhead is included and there would be a loss of $7.70 on the sale instead of a profit of $18.25.

The formula just used is the basis of Table I which is arranged for convenience of furniture merchants in rapidly figuring costs on a correct basis. The overhead in this table ranges from 15% to 30% of the selling price and a net profit ranging from one to 25% of the selling price, the highest possible mark-up with this table being 55% of the selling price which is equivalent to 124% of the cost of merchandise.

Doubtless some merchants will insist that the method of figuring on the cost price is satisfactory. Table II is arranged to enable them to check up on themselves. The percentages of mark-up, based on the cost price, commonly used in the furniture business are shown in the left hand column. Their equivalents, in terms of the selling price, are obtained from the sum of the figure above the horizontal line and the figure below it in the same column. For example, 25% added to the cost is 20% of the sales price. If the cost of operation is 10% of the sales price, there will be a net profit of 10% but if the cost of business is 20% there will be no profit. After finding the percentage of overhead to selling price, as explained in the first part of this article, a merchant can quickly locate his profit.

Figuring everything on the sales price, however, enables a merchant to know at all times just what he is doing. He knows his costs, his overhead and the profit he is making. A fixed mark-up on the cost price leaves everything to guess work and is the cause of many a merchant closing his doors because he exchanged his dollars for customers' dollars instead of reaping a well-earned reward.

Method—Divide the cost by the figure in the column of the net per cent desired, on a line with the per cent it costs to do business (overhead).

Example—If cost of merchandise and freight is \$80, overhead 30%, and you desire a profit of 13%, locate the figure in the column under 13, on a line with 30, which is .57.  $.57 \times 80.00 = 140.35$  selling price.

Method—If your overhead, based on sales of previous year, is represented by one of the figures in top row and you mark your selling price at one of the percentages shown in left hand column above your cost for merchandise, then your percentage of net profit is represented by the figures shown at the junction of the column and line.

Example—Overhead is 20 per cent of sales. Your mark-up is 33 1/3 per cent above the cost of merchandise; your net profit will be 5 per cent of your selling price.

Period Styles in Furniture

By HELEN E. GARDNER

Gothic Period

The time of the Crusades between the Dark Ages and the Renaissance Period

Time 1100 - 1500    Style originated in France. Flanders, England and Germany followed. Also Italy and Spain.

GOTHIC, the term applied to the styles of a colorful age beginning in the twelfth century. The "dark ages" of eight hundred years were left behind and an entirely new form of architecture and decoration came into existence. It lasted until the time of the Renaissance, four hundred years later.

This was the time of the Crusades to the Holy Land and when the crusaders came marching back they brought with them fresh, new ideas of decoration from other lands and these were eagerly seized upon by the countries of Western Europe. The beautiful, soaring Gothic churches were built at this time and most of our present-day church architecture follows this style.

The furniture of Gothic times had the same characteristics as the architecture. There were heavy, massive oak pieces, richly carved with motifs of religious significance—the trefoil for the Trinity, the circle for eternity, and so forth. Pointed arches and pierced tracery added to their architectural appearance.

This was a splendid period and one full of religious significance. It had its influence on succeeding periods but the purely Gothic style is little used in modern times except for church furnishings.

STYLE

Essentially a straight-line, carved oak style. Splendid and architectural; an ecclesiastical style of high, soaring effects like the Gothic churches.

DETAILS

Lines; straight and rectangular.

Proportions; heavy and massive and high.

Legs; plain, block legs.

Feet; none, in many cases. Lion paws used sometimes.

Arms; straight and horizontal.

Underbracing; plain, heavy stretchers.

Moldings; sharp and narrow.

Ornaments; carving was the sole ornamentation. Pierced carving is a mark of the Gothic. The motifs for the most part were derived from Gothic architecture and hence of religious significance. Such were the trefoil, quatrefoil, circle, etc. The pointed Gothic arches in the decoration identify a piece as being Gothic. Gothic columns and finials used. Panelled carving, adapted from stained glass windows in the churches was much used. Linen-fold designs in the panelling are typically Gothic. Hardware, hand-wrought, iron mounts and hinges. There were no drawer-pulls as furniture containing drawers had not as yet been invented.

Upholstery, lacking.

Materials; oak was the predominant wood and well-suited to the square, straight-line effect. Some pine was used.

Finish; simply wax finish.

Characteristic furniture of the time; largely case furniture. Heavy chests were most important articles. Stools and benches were largely used instead of chairs. Chairs were of the high-backed, "throne" type. Cupboards. Enclosed, canopied beds. Dressers for displaying plate in the dining halls.

MODERN USE

Principally for ecclesiastical purposes—church pulpits, pews and chairs. The limited modern use of this style is the result of its massiveness, and ecclesiastical feeling.

French. Chests were very important articles of furniture in these days. Pieces containing drawers were not made until later. See the very simple construction and narrow molding. Wide moldings casting heavier shadows will be seen in the next period.

Used for storing household supplies. It is important to notice the panels with the "linen-fold" design. This invariably marks a piece as Gothic, or of Gothic influence.

Notice the straight structural lines. The paneled carving is evidently taken from stained-glass window design. The seat is high and uncomfortable as in all early chairs. High, straight back and straight arms.

Here again we have the straight, square structure. The pierced arch carving immediately is recognized as being Gothic. Notice the open door which has the typically Gothic pointed arch shape. In each piece shown on this page observe how wonderfully and perfectly the carving is shaped and fitted to the space it occupies. It is masterly art.

Italian Renaissance Period

The Rebirth of Ancient Greek and Roman Culture

Time 1443 - 1564

Country - Italy

A WONDERFUL flowering of art and letters was the Renaissance period—a “re-birth,” the name itself indicates, a rebirth of ancient Greek and Roman culture. It began in Italy in the fifteenth century and spread to the other countries of Western Europe. There was everywhere a burning interest in the old classical forms and the artists of the time applied themselves to producing similar works.

The nobility were wealthy and powerful and all the arts flourished under their patronage. It was a rich and sumptuous period and the furniture produced is among the most beautiful ever made.

At present there is a strong wave of interest in Italian Renaissance furnishings in America. Exact reproductions are to be had of many of these wonderful old pieces but care should be exercised when furnishing in this period a throne-room furnishings are incongruous in a bungalow.

STYLE

A revival of classical (ancient Greek and Roman) feeling in furniture.

Accentuation of low, straight-line effects, with classical decorations.

A formal style; palatial, rather than home-like.

DETAILS

Lines; straight.

Proportions; low and rectangular. Palatial in size.

General effect; substantial solidity with beautiful proportions and restrained decoration.

Legs; of chairs, straight and rectangular. Of tables, massive and turned. Many tables with lyre-shaped supports.

Feet; Lions' paw feet.

Plain or carved block feet.

Turned round feet.

Much of the case furniture rested directly on the floor without feet.

Arms of chairs; straight out from back. Plain and rounded under at ends.

Underbracing; heavy underbracing is very characteristic of this period. Floor stretchers on chairs.

Moldings; wider and heavier than the Gothic.

Ornament; chiefly of carving; flat carving rather than in high relief or pierced. The carving was rich, but conventional and restrained.

Painting and gilding and metal mounts added to the richness of effect.

Small round ornaments are very characteristic.

The motifs of the Renaissance period were classical; acanthus leaves, and other natural forms conventionalized. (They avoided naturalistic effects.) Greek architectural motifs much used; fluted columns, scrolls, friezes, and urns.

Mounts; metal mounts and decorations used greatly. Metal lions' paw feet.

Plain, round pulls were characteristic.

Material; principal wood was walnut.

Upholstery; crimson velvet upholstery with gold fringe, tassels and nails. Also leather upholstering.

Characteristic pieces; chests, benches and stools, chairs, straight and X shaped; tables, drawtop and octagonal; credenzas (sideboards), cabinets, desks.

MODERN USE

Italian Renaissance furniture is rich in effect. It was used rather sparingly in the original period and care should be taken in its modern use. The style calls for a dignified restraint. Many of the pieces are suitably used only in formal and rich surroundings. It is in harmony with Spanish and French Renaissance furniture and may be successfully used with the architecture of those countries.

Notice the very square effect. Perpendicular back, always with the uprights extended above into carved finials. Square, high seat with fringed seat rail. Upholstering introduced and a new class of workmen came into being. Some chairs had simple spindles in the back and some wide pierced splats in front.

A unique type of chair evolved from the ancient folding chair. Notice the characteristic, small round ornaments. Here we have the floor stretchers and finials at the top. In this period chairs were not used as generally as in modern times. The few that were used were placed in great dignity against the wall.

Notice the heavy legs and stretchers. The whole effect is massive and yet beautifully proportioned in every detail. The moldings are simple, yet wonderfully refined.

A piece of great charm. The straight lines of the period emphasized. Ornaments of metal and in classic design. Characteristic lions' paw feet and small round pulls. Compare the wide, overhanging molding with the sharp, narrow moldings of the preceding Gothic period.

Here we have the parent of the octagonal tables being used so much at the present time. Modern designs however, are much lighter in effect.

Note the straight-line, rectangular effect; it is noticeable despite the richly carved Renaissance decoration. The ornament is beautifully balanced and proportioned.

Painted Venetian Furniture

Time 1700

Country - Northern Italy

AN ITALIAN style much later than the Renaissance; one that has been revived in popularity due to the modern interest in painted furniture.

In form this style of furniture followed the later French periods and also the Queen Anne style. The type of decoration was inspired by the classical discoveries made at Pompeii about this time. The decoration was done in polychrome on red, blue, or yellow backgrounds.

This style has a great deal of charm and interest; a piece of it placed in a room adds color and life.

The back of the chair with its splat in the middle is reminiscent of the English Queen Anne style from which it probably received its inspiration. The painted decorations are typically Italian.

Showing the beautiful decoration of this type of furniture; it was classic in origin (see notes) and always well-spaced and distributed over the spaces.

French Renaissance Period

Art was Subsidized by Wealthy Nobility

Time 1515 - 1643

Country - France

FRANCE, like Italy and the other countries of Western Europe at this time, began to leave Gothic arts and traditions behind. The rebirth of classical arts and literature, which was called the Renaissance period and which had such a marvelous effect, influenced France to a great extent. Wars and expeditions to Italy brought her in touch with the new Renaissance styles there; examples of furniture found their way to France and Italian designers were brought there.

France was a united country with the king and his household in full sway. Thus one style dominated the country; the style set by the court. This was a different situation from that in Italy where the different parts of the country were controlled by various dukes and princes.

STYLE

Somewhat the same as that of the Italian Renaissance furniture, but far more elaborately carved and with a Gothic tendency toward height.

Strong architectural feeling and solidity of effect. The carved ornament is distinctively Renaissance, derived through Italy from classical sources and abounding in curves.

The pediment top of cabinets is a distinguishing mark of the French Renaissance. (See cut No. 2.)

DETAILS

Lines; straight and rectangular but much softened by the rich decoration.

Proportions; large and massive.

General Effect; heavy, architectural and rich.

Legs; straight, turned. (See cut No. 3.) The heavy cabinets and chairs came close to the floor and were supported on feet. Tables had lyre-shaped supports at the ends. (See cut No. 1.)

Feet; block, bun-shaped, or pear-shaped.

Arms of chairs. Straight and rectangular in effect like the Gothic. Serpentine curve used also.

Backs of chairs. High and straight, giving a throne-like effect. Richly carved. Much like the Gothic chairs except for the Renaissance type of carving which was very different from the Gothic. (See cut No. 5.) (In many cases Italian Renaissance chairs were copied almost exactly as they stood; see cuts of that period.)

Seats; square and straight; upholstery lacking.

Ornament;

1. Principally of carving. Carving of the finest and most elaborate kind was the glory of French Renaissance furniture. French craftsmen seemed fairly to outdo themselves in this respect; much of the carving has almost a sculptured effect. The motifs used were Renaissance (classical), but were much freer and more natural than those used by the Italians. The acanthus leaf was used constantly. Other motifs were fluted columns, sphinxes, lion heads, human heads and figures. Also the French royal insignia, such as the fleur-de-lys and the porcupine.
2. Small insets of black marble are typical of the French Renaissance style.
3. Pendant ornaments were used in the French Renaissance, but not in the Italian; this is a distinguishing mark between the two. They were a survival of the Gothic.
4. Moldings were sharper than those in the Italian Renaissance; this again is perhaps a mark of the Gothic. (The Gothic style was never very strong in Italy.)

Materials; walnut was the wood used; it was well-suited to this finely-carved style.

Mounts; small, inconspicuous metal pulls.

Characteristic Pieces:

Tables; were long and elaborately carved.

Lyre-shaped end supports joined by a colonnade. (See cut No. 1.)

Draw-top tables also.

Chairs; chest seats and very high backs. Also smaller chairs with legs and lower backs.

Italian chairs were often copied.

Dressoirs for displaying food or plate are very typical.

Armoires, or cabinets, for storing linen and clothing were characteristic pieces of furniture.

Chests were still much in use.

MODERN USE

There is much inspiration in the tables of the French Renaissance; the style is easily adapted for modern use and many fine reproductions are seen.

Figure 5

Showing the typical broken pediment top which is a mark of French Renaissance. Note that the effect is quite architectural (a tendency of this period). The pediment and the columns contribute greatly to this effect. Flat bun-shaped feet.

Figure 3. LOW-BACKED CHAIR

Here we see a tendency toward a modern type of chair and away from the throne-like idea. Legs are used instead of a boxed-in lower portion and the back is lower. However, the seat is still straight and uncomfortable and the back is perfectly straight. Typical French Renaissance legs of simple turning; notice the rather archaic stretchers close to the floor.

Carved with the greatest elaboration. Compare with an Italian piece and see how restrained in ornamentation the latter appears. Use here of human figures and heads and winged griffins.

Spanish Renaissance Period

Shows Moorish Influence

Time 1500 - 1650

Country - Spain during Renaissance influence

THIS was the grand period of Spanish history. Charles V, King of Spain, was also Emperor over the Netherlands, Austria, Germany and Italy. America had been discovered by Columbus in 1492 and Spain controlled this vast possession also.

A very important influence on Spanish art was the occupation of Spain by the Moors (Mohammedans from northern Africa). They were there for many centuries before this period and were finally overthrown at this time.

Spain, by its geographical location, is quite isolated and this fact has an important bearing on the arts of the country.

STYLE

Influences;

1. Gothic. See Gothic period.
2. Renaissance. See Renaissance periods of other countries; Italian influence was especially strong.
3. Moorish. The Moors were an oriental people and their strong influence on Spanish furniture gave it a different character from the furniture of France and Italy.

A style of great dignity and richness; very decorative. Furniture of splendid and honest character; restrained, yet vigorous.

Spanish pieces possess great individuality, balance of proportion and refinement of treatment.

Fascinating and elaborate decoration, yet dignified and restrained. A "concentrated richness of color and relief standing forth against a severe background."

A style in which beautiful leather and iron work is very important (due to Moorish influence). Iron braces on tables is a distinctly Spanish detail.

Scrolls and arcades are typical of the Spanish style.

DETAILS

Lines; general lines straight; rectangular effect. Some curving lines used in contrast.

Proportions; rather heavy and substantial.

General Effect; great dignity and richness.

Structure; splendid and sturdy. Laws were enforced regarding the materials and workmanship of furniture in order to protect the public.

Legs of chairs.

1. Straight rectangular legs; plain, grooved, or carved. (See cut No. 3.)
2. Straight legs; baluster-turned or spiral-turned. (See cuts No. 1 and 4.)
3. Scroll legs.

Legs of tables. Trestle-like in effect—a pair at each end, splayed outward and connected by a wrought-iron brace underneath the table (characteristically Spanish). (See cut No. 5.) Smaller tables had straight, turned legs.

Varaguenos (writing-desks) had supports of three columns at each end, connected by an arcade between.

Feet;

1. Scroll feet are typically Spanish (called the "Spanish Scroll"). This style of foot was taken to Holland during the Spanish occupation, and from there spread to England and thence to Colonial America. (See cut No. 9.)
2. Turned feet. a. Bun shape (See cut No. 10). b. Pear shape (See cut No. 7.)
3. Claw feet (Renaissance influence). (See cut No. 5.) Also hoof feet.
4. Mere terminations of straight, rectangular legs. (See cut No. 3.)

Arms; straight or slightly curving and ending in a scroll. (See cut No. 2.) Sometimes spiral-turned as in cut No. 4.

Backs; two types, high and low. Upholstered or carved, with arcades of spindles.

1. High back. (See cut No. 1.) The arched contour of the top and bottom of the back is distinctly Spanish; this arched effect was taken up in Holland and later in England, resulting in the characteristic arches and "hoods" of the William and Mary and Queen Anne periods. The large brass nails and brass finials are very Spanish.
2. Low backs; always with straight tops. Upholstered back. (See cut No. 4.) Carved back with arcades of spindles. (See cut No. 3.) This is the ancestor of similar chairs found in the Dutch and Flemish styles, and also of the "Yorkshire" or "Derbyshire" chair of England. See early Jacobean style.

Seats; square and straight in line. Sometimes "dipped" slightly to fit the body.

Underbracing; greatly used in the Spanish Renaissance style; everything was strongly braced. Chairs had low stretchers; straight, baluster-turned, or spiral-turned. A very noticeable characteristic of Spanish chairs is the elaborate decoration of the front stretcher which is generally quite wide. (See cuts Nos. 1 and 3.) A detail which is sometimes seen and is very Spanish is where the under side of a stretcher on chair or table is cut into a shaped design. (See cut No. 9.)

Ornament; very rich and elaborate.

1. Carving, in a rather close, fine effect. Chip carving was used on some less elaborate models.
2. Elaborate metal mounts used as decoration are typically Spanish; intricate, open work designs underlaid with red velvet.
3. Studding of gilt nails is characteristic. (See cut No. 7.) Sometimes a design was formed of the nails (see the border around the back in cut No. 4.)
4. Much gold embroidery on red and green velvet. Gold fringe much used.
5. Gilding and painting.
6. Inlaying was a distinctive part of this Spanish style; materials used were bone, brass, silver, and tortoise-shell, giving a very rich effect. Moorish designs, in all-over arabesque patterns, were much used.

7. Red velvet strained over wood, on chests, is a Spanish mode of decoration.

8. A distinctively Spanish style was the straining of leather over wood; the leather was stamped and colored in intricate designs. (See cut No. 1.)

9. Arcades of spindles were very distinctive features of the style. (See cuts No. 3 and No. 8.) The originated from Spanish architecture which has arcading for one of its salient features.

10. Decorating surfaces by means of applied moldings originated in this Spanish style. (See cut No. 10.) It is most interesting to see how this style traveled to the Netherlands and thence to England where we find it very distinctive of the late Jacobean (Charles II) style.

11. The Spanish scroll, a typical feature that traveled to the Netherlands and to England; still later to America where we find it in feet and arms of certain types of chairs.

12. Other decorative features were decorated slender pillars; and spindles, baluster-turned, mulled, or spiral-turned.

13. Some of the motifs were of Renaissance origin, birds, urns, intertwined ribbons.

A motif that was much used was the shell ornament, the symbol of St. James, the patron saint of Spain. (See cuts No. 8 and No. 10.)

Materials; woods in use were walnut, oak, chestnut, cedar, cypress, and pine. Other materials were wrought iron, brass, velvet, leather, and (for inlaying) bone, silver, brass and tortoise-shell.

Upholstery; red or green velvet, generally heavily upholstered, were much used for upholstering.

Decorated leather upholstery is a typical Spanish style. Held in place by large decorated gilt tacks.

Mounts; elaborately beautiful of openwork metal, often underlaid with velvet.

Characteristic Pieces; furniture was not very plentiful in old Spain; the Moorish influence was strong and the Moors were an oriental people who used little furniture. The oriental idea is to decorate the home by means of elaborate hangings and architectural ornament. Not only was furniture not plentiful but also the different kinds of pieces were few—chairs, upholstered benches, beds, tables, screens, chests, and the characteristically Spanish varagueno (writing desk).

MODERN USE

When Spanish architecture was revived an interest began to be taken in Spanish styles of furniture. They are eminently suited to the attractive Spanish houses that are being built. The richness and the decorative quality of this style fills many other needs however and it is destined to become better known and more popularly used as time goes on.

Dutch and Flemish Styles

Sixteenth and seventeenth centuries

Holland and Flanders (Belgium)

TO understand Dutch and Flemish styles it is necessary to understand the events of history during this time. Holland and Flanders were not separate countries until the middle of the seventeenth century and their furniture was practically alike until that time. For hundreds of years the "Low Countries" had been involved in wars against oppression. For years they were ruled by Spain. In 1581 Holland separated, declaring herself a republic; Flanders remained under Spanish rule for many years. From this time on the styles separated; Flanders followed French fashions and Holland developed individual styles of her own.

It is important to remember that Holland was a great sea-faring nation at this time. She brought back new materials and new ideas in furnishings from the ends of the earth; from Japan, and the East Indies, and many other places.

Thus it is seen that many foreign influences were at work on the styles of these countries; the influence of Spain, Italy, France, Germany, and the Orient. In turn they influenced English furniture periods; Late Jacobean (Charles II had been exiled in the Netherlands), William and Mary (William was a Hollander), Queen Anne, and Early Georgian. Many Dutch tendencies are seen in early American furniture.

Holland and Flanders are great home-loving countries and there is a solid, domestic flavor about their furniture. It is apt to be heavy, bulky, and more clumsy than graceful. It is inferior to the Renaissance styles of other countries.

Elaborate and beautiful inlay was used on many Dutch pieces. The Dutch being very fond of flowers, floral designs were very popular. The style carried over to England and became the rage there (see illustrations of William and Mary period). Shaped top; later seen in England. Observe the large bun feet again.

Heavy, almost clumsy look. Legs; spiral-turned (of East Indian influence). The Netherlands is where the Late Jacobean (Charles II) style obtained the spiral turning so characteristic of it. Feet; large bun shape. Stretchers; shaped with round ornament in the center.

The Dutch originated this type of chair back (U-shaped with broad central splat). This style of chair became popular in England and was called Queen Anne. Still later Chippendale used it for some of his creations. Legs; cabriole. Feet; ball and claw. Stretchers; used here. Not often used in English adaptations.

Same style as the chair above. Legs; cabriole. Feet; scroll. Shaped front. Shaped "apron" ornament typically Dutch. Material; walnut. Most Dutch furniture was in oak.

Figure 8. SMALL DUTCH TABLE

Toward the end of the seventeenth century a strong Italian influence made the styles lighter and more graceful. Legs; turned. Stretchers; shaped with centre ornament. Shaped "apron" and pendant ornaments (below drawer). Observe these points carefully. We will meet them again in England during the period of William and Mary which was of Dutch origin.

Typically Dutch. General effect; massive, bulky, square. Ornamentation; heavy cornice and frieze at the top, heavy columns and square panels. Feet; very characteristic, large bun feet—sometimes called the "Dutch Foot."

Louis XIV (Quatorze) Period

A Reign of Unequalled Splendor

Time 1643-1715

Country - France in the reign of Louis XIV

LOUIS XIV, the "Grand" and the "Magnificent," ruled France for seventy-two years. It was a reign of unequalled splendor and magnificence. During this time France became the leading nation of Europe. The king established royal workshops for the execution of his ideas in crafts and furnishings of all kind. Here the best craftsmen to be obtained worked for the glory of France. The style they developed was naturally a regal and magnificent one.

STYLE

A large, magnificent style of many straight lines and a few curves.

Severe, classical, symmetrical.

Decorated but not to excess.

Massive, formal, dignified; a style for grandeur rather than for comfortable use.

DETAILS

Lines; mostly straight—some curves were used. Louis XIV had more curves than the Renaissance style that preceded, and less curves than the Louis XV period that followed.

Proportions; large and massive.

General Effect; dignified, formal and regal.

Legs; rather heavy in effect when contrasted with the later Louis periods. Some were straight, and some cabriole in shape. The four legs of a chair were always exactly alike.

Feet; in cloven hoof style, or carved acanthus leaf.

Arms of chairs, straight or curved; often with padded arm rests.

Backs of chairs; one of the distinguishing marks of the Louis XIV style are the chair backs which are generally high, and straight at the sides, and often straight lined at the top. (See cuts.)

Seats; are straight in line like the backs of the chairs.

Underbracing; was often used on chairs. X-shaped stretchers are distinctive of the period.

Ornament; was lavishly but not extravagantly used. Types of decoration were carving, painting, gilding, inlay, lacquer, and metal mounts. (Note the change from the preceding period where carving was the sole kind of decoration.)

Paneling was much used; tended to be square in shape. Mouldings were large.

Materials; woods used were oak, walnut, ebony and chestnut. Various rare woods were used for inlaying, and tortoise shell was used as a veneer over which was set a metal inlay.

Tops of tables and commodes were often of marble.

Upholstery; exceedingly rich and gorgeous. Gobelins, tapestries, Lyons velvets and damasks. Slip covers were often used over these materials.

Mounts were employed decoratively as well as for use. Elaborate and beautiful of various kinds of metal.

Colors of the period were somewhat dark and heavy. The color contrasts were strong. Green, crimson and gold were popular colors.

Characteristic Pieces; chairs and settees. Cabinets and commodes. Desks. Canopied beds. Long salon tables and small tables.

MODERN USE

A style suitable for luxurious hotels and dwellings. Of value where dignity and a formal effect is desired. Not adapted to small homes or ordinary surroundings. The chairs and tables of the period were very large; they were made for use in large and magnificent interiors where entertaining was done on a grand scale.

In spite of its magnificence the straight, rather austere lines of this piece are evident. The pediment and bun feet are survivals of the Flemish influence of just before this period.

(Metropolitan Museum)

Note that the general effect of this sofa is straight and rectangular—the direct opposite of the curving lines of the Louis XV style to follow. The serpentine stretchers meeting at the centre are typical of Louis XIV.

Elegant and Luxurious

Time 1715-1774 Country - France in the reign of Louis XV

LOUIS XV PERIOD (QUINZE) HISTORY

LOUIS XV was the great-grandson of Louis XIV. He was but five years old when the old king died, and during his minority the Duke of Orleans acted as Regent. This short space of time is sometimes referred to as the Regency period and furniture of a transitional style between Louis XIV and Louis XV is called Regency furniture.

The young king grew up to be extravagant and profligate and the court that surrounded him was grossly immoral. It was an elegant and refined immorality however; the styles were dictated by the whims of a succession of mistresses and their tastes were elegant and luxurious. Contrasted with the riotous extravagance of the court was the widespread misery and discontent of the common people which was to culminate in the dreadful Revolution in the reign of the next king, Louis XVI. Louis XV was wont to say, "After me, the deluge."

STYLE

Essentially a gorgeous, curved line style. A "Triumph of Curves." Louis XV is an easy style to recognize as it is absolutely distinctive and different from any other style.

All lines were curved—stately lines were conspicuous by their absence. Ornament was naturalistic of exceeding richness.

It was a style representing the court life of an age noted for its luxury and frivolity. It is a boudoir and parlor type of furniture. A playful, capricious, unrestrained style.

DETAILS

Lines; everything in the Louis XV style was curved. The lines of seats and backs of chairs and settees, tops of tables and cabinets, and often the fronts and sides of cabinet work was bowed out in swelling curves. A sinuous, flowing style.

Proportions; smaller than those of the preceding Louis XV style. Graceful.

General Effect; elegant, rich, and very luxurious.

Legs; always the cabriole leg in a strong, graceful curve and richly ornamented. The cabriole leg is very distinctive of the Louis XV style. (See cuts.)

Feet; scrolled leaf. Dolphin-head.

Arms; of chairs and settees; short and flaring with sharply curved supports joining the seat rail far back from the front.

Backs; broad with curving outlines and the framing much carved. Generally upholstered.

Seats; shaped in many curves and richly carved framing; upholstered.

Underbracing; stretchers disappeared in this period.

Ornament; an elaborately ornamented style; rich ornament in a great variety of natural forms was employed. Beauty of detail was emphasized above everything else. Plain surfaces of any kind were avoided. Types of decoration used were carving, inlay, marquetry, painting, gilding, and above all, elaborate metal mounts. The motifs used were wreaths, flowers, shells, lozenges, human figures. Moldings were lighter in effect than those of the preceding Louis XIV period. Panels were longer and not square as those of the Louis XIV period.

Materials; the woods in use were mahogany, walnut, ebony. Various rare woods were employed for inlay work. Lacquer and paint were much used over wood.

Upholstery; there were many luxurious fabrics employed in upholstering; Gobelin tapestries, damasks, velvets, and brocades. Moquettes and cotton prints were also used.

Mounts; elaborate metal mounts, used for decoration as well as for service. Scrolled, naturalistic type.

Colors were lighter and gayer than those of the Louis XIV period. Popular colors were white and gold, pearl grey, silver, rose, and delicate blues and greens.

Characteristic Pieces; chairs and settees. Canopied beds. Commodes and cabinets. Tables. Dressing tables. Chaise longue. Desks.

MODERN USE

Louis XV is an attractive and popular style that has been adapted to many modern types of furniture. Davenport and upholstered chairs in this style give a rich and sumptuous effect. Bedroom furniture is not seen as much as is that of the next style, the Louis XVI.

Louis XVI (Seize) Period

A Return to Greater Refinement

Time 1774-1793

Country - France in the reign of Louis XVI

HISTORY

LOUIS XVI was rather a weakling, totally unfitted to meet the grave responsibilities of a nation desperate with poverty after the extravagances of his predecessors. He married the beautiful Marie Antoinette of Austria, who was far more clever than Louis yet still almost a child in years and discretion. Together they made a pair unable to stem the rushing tide that led to the Revolution and to their own execution on the guillotine.

The court of Louis XVI was free from the immoralities of the previous reign; things were much cleaner and saner and the styles of the time reflect the court. Tired of the over-elaboration of the Louis XV period the pendulum swung to the straight-lined classical styles again.

STYLE

A small, slender, straight line style; the direct opposite of the preceding Louis XV style and a reaction against its excessive curves and ornamentation. Like the Renaissance period it was a return to simple, classic forms. A dainty, effeminate, rather monotonous style; simple and graceful.

A more homelike style without theatrical effect.

Dainty and refined ornamentation.

DETAILS

Lines; straight for the most part. The few curves that were employed were long and slender.

Proportions; small and light. Rectangular.

General Effect; dainty, graceful, and elegant. Legs are a characteristic point of this period; straight and tapered—generally grooved, but sometimes carved.

Feet; simple tapered ending of legs. (See cuts.)

Arms; of chairs and sofas—straight or with a slight curve. The supports were straight continuations of the front legs, or else a slight backward curve. Padded arm rests.

Backs; of chairs were either square or hooped in shape. Were upholstered, caned, or carved.

Seats; either round or square, or square with a shaped front.

Underbracing; not used in this period; the slight, dainty effect would have been spoiled by stretchers.

Ornament; Carving. Painting. Lacquer. Inlay. Fluting, reeding, and beading were much employed. The ornamentation was beautifully placed. The slenderness of the forms was accentuated by much fluting and grooving. Tiny regular repeats were much used. Motifs; chiefly classical—wreaths and baskets of flowers, rope carvings, pendant husks, flaming torches, fluted columns, garlands and bouquets, lyres and urns, festoons of ribbons. Round and oval medallions are very characteristic. Moldings were slender and emphasized by flutings. Panels; were long and slender—corners often broken.

Materials; mahogany was the favored wood (it was also used for floors and woodwork). Walnut and satinwood were also used. Soft woods were painted or gilded.

Upholstery; delicate fabrics were employed—silks, satins, brocades, damasks and velvets. Floral designs and stripes were very popular. Light colors were most used.

Mounts; were simpler than in the preceding periods but they still were used decoratively.

Colors; soft and subdued. Light tints prevailed in upholstery and woodwork. Favorite color combinations were white and yellow; and green, white and gold.

MODERN USE

The light and attractive Louis XVI style is a favorite with modern designers. It is simple and small in scale, adapting itself well to modern requirements. It is especially effective in bedroom suites.

Empire Period

Inspired by Napoleon

Time 1793 - 1830

Country - France in the time of Napoleon

THE Empire style materialized out of the great ambition and vanity of Napoleon. He took the keenest interest in antiquities. The power and glory of ancient Rome appealing to him especially, he decided to surround himself with the forms and insignia of that time. Various artists were commissioned to carry out these ideas in furnishings and the Empire style resulted. Thus it happens that it is the least French of any French style.

The keynote of this style is that of military pomp and imperialistic ambition. The dominating personages on the stage of events were cold and calculating. This reflected itself in the furnishings of the time.

An interesting development of the French Empire style occurred in America where it formed the basis of the decorative styles of the nineteenth century.

STYLE

Napoleonic style. Imitation of ancient Greek, Roman, and Egyptian forms. The idea of conquest uppermost. A pompous, grandiose, heavy, artificial, style.

DETAILS

Lines; mostly straight with a few simple curves.

Proportions; heavy and ponderous.

General effect; plain surfaces with brass mounts of antique emblems.

Legs; straight and turned or slightly curved.

Feet; metal feet much used. Paw and claw feet. Some square feet. Feet of chairs mere termination of leg.

Moldings; heavy and imposing.

Ornament; almost entirely of metal mounts. Some painting and gilding.

Columns and scrolled supports much used. Metal rings at base and top of columns.

Motifs used; (a) Designs of conquest such as the sword, shield, winged human figures, thunder bolt of Jove, and kingly beasts and birds such as the lion and eagle.

(b) Other emblems; Egyptian sphinx, wings, cornucopias, the lyre, pineapple, flaming torch, Greek band, Napoleon's own personal emblems were stars, representing the conqueror, bees, and wreaths enclosing the initial "N."

Pulls and hardware; inconspicuous round pulls. Glass knobs also used. Furniture lavishly decorated with metal ornaments. The metal workers of the period were exceedingly clever.

Upholstery; rich and heavy fabrics. Leather an innovation.

Colors; deep browns, rich greens, red, royal blue, and purple.

Materials; fine mahogany was the chief wood used. Also some rosewood and ebony.

MODERN USE

A version of the Empire style was very popular in America in the early nineteenth century. Of late years it has been revived through a great interest in the furniture of Duncan Phyfe, a fashionable cabinet-maker of New York City, who was the best designer of that time. Duncan Phyfe styles are to be found in almost every furniture store.

The pedestal effect at the sides is most characteristic of the period. The top is marble. There is the usual metal ornamentation. The wood as in most Empire pieces shows little graining and is highly varnished so that the general effect is more like marble than wood.

The winged figures upholding the table are very Egyptian in feeling. In some versions of the Empire tables are often upheld by a central pedestal. See American Empire.

Simple Napoleononic

Rigidly simple in form with a square frame and round, straight, legs. Unimaginative in conception. Notice that stretchers are not used. The specially woven fabric bears the imperial "N" in the middle of the back.

Imperial Roman Type

Notice that the back rounds with the seat and that the legs spread forward and backward. It is important to observe the top rail of the back which is scrolled backward in the Greek manner; this is a detail that is much used in the American version of the Empire style.

Egyptian Type

Compare this chair with the ancient Egyptian one at the right. The general effect is much the same, with the low back and low seat and the arms starting near the top of the back. Napoleon's wars in Egypt are mirrored in many Empire styles.

The winged griffin used here as support is a motif borrowed from ancient classical sources. The table is painted and gilded and the whole effect is one of showy magnificence.

Elizabethan Period

Sometimes Called Tudor Style

Time 1558-1603

Country - England in the reign of Queen Elizabeth

THE Renaissance period in England. The reign of Queen Elizabeth, after whom the period is named, was a great and glorious one. English navigators embarked on many voyages of discovery and conquest. Literature and the arts flourished—it was the age of Shakespeare.

For the first time interest was taken in purely domestic buildings. Heretofore religious architecture and fortified castles had been chiefly built.

It was an extravagant and showy period in every way. The queen lived in the midst of ceremony and splendor. There was great display at court and wherever the queen traveled about the country. Dress was exceedingly elaborate; even the men dressed in silks and velvets and lace. Thus the furniture reflected the times and was showy rather than comfortable.

STYLE

The English Renaissance style succeeded the English Gothic. Massive, straight-line furniture of oak, with elaborately carved decoration copied from the Italian Renaissance. The Elizabethan is an interesting but rather crude style; the rich, curving, Renaissance ornament is plastered over the sturdy English structure with its many lingering Gothic characteristics. It was a style for show rather than comfort.

Identify Elizabethan by the characteristic ornament and the huge, bulbous protuberances on the legs.

DETAILS

Lines; straight.

Proportions; rectangular, square. Heavy to the point of clumsiness. Large in size.

General effect; a massive richness.

Legs; one of most characteristic points; huge bulbous ornaments or massive turnings.

Feet; straight and square or bun shape.

Arms; Gothic arms were perfectly straight but the Elizabethan began to slope slightly downward.

Underbracing; much used. Heavy and straight. Near floor to serve as foot rests.

Ornament; chiefly carving; moldings, paneling. Very rich in effect. No pierced carving as in preceding Gothic period. Bulbous ornaments much used. Note that the carving is well spread over all the surfaces. Much carving, scrolled ornament.

Motifs; Renaissance, curving acanthus leaves. Tudor arch and Tudor rose. Lozenges. Gothic; linenfold panels, crude foliage, figures and animals. Strap work. Arms of owner.

Hardware; simple hinges and small round pulls.

Upholstery; hard wooden backs and seats until late in the period when stuffed and cane seats began to be used.

Materials; oak was the principal wood used. Simple wax finish.

Characteristic pieces in use; amount of furniture was scanty. Wainscot chairs, huge four-poster beds, long rectangular tables, cupboards, chests, stools and benches. Court cupboards.

MODERN USE

The Elizabethan motif is used in Early English Style dining room suites, phonographs and odd pieces such as tables and stools.

Notice square effect, square feet, and the typical ornament; strap work (along the bottom rail), lozenges in the panels, and Tudor arches in the ornament along the top.

DESCRIPTIONS

Metropolitan Museum

Originated in a low cupboard placed on a table. The bulbous ornaments are exceedingly Elizabethan. See the characteristic square feet and low, heavy stretchers. The three forms of decoration of the period are seen here—rich carving, paneling and moldings. Get the square, rectangular, massive effect in all the other pieces shown.

The beds of the nobility were massive, of carved and panelled oak. The heavy testers had posts sometimes completely outside of the bed, as here. Characteristic rich ornament, of acanthus leaves, lozenges, melon bulbs, and Tudor arches.

Metropolitan Museum

So-called from resemblance of back to wainscoting. General square effect, low stretchers, downward slanted arms, uncomfortable high back. Shakespeare probably sat in a wainscot chair at his work.

Stools and benches were in common use among the people at this time. The high-backed, formal chairs were not in such general use. Notice the bulbous legs and heavy stretchers which served to keep the feet off the floor. In those days the floors were covered with rushes, and apt to be damp and unsanitary.

The typical tables of the times were long and narrow, with thick plank tops, and clumsy, bloated legs joined by heavy stretchers which served as a foot rest.

Early Jacobean

Early Stuart

Time 1603 - 1649

Country - England in the reigns of James I and Charles I

THIS period is named after King James (Jacobus is the Latin for James). There is apt to be confusion regarding furniture called Jacobean; the term "Jacobean" in general includes three periods—Early Jacobean, Cromwellian, and Late Jacobean (also called Charles II, Late Stuart, Restoration, or Carolean). We will take up each one of the three periods in turn, with the first one, the Early Jacobean, on this page. Early Jacobean and Late Jacobean are very different in style; it is necessary to know the distinctions.

The Early Jacobean period developed a more typically English style than either the preceding period (Elizabethan) or the following (Late Jacobean, or Charles II), which were foreign in their inspirations. Everything was sturdy and English in structure and design in the Early Jacobean. It is interesting to know that it supplied the models for much of the Early American furniture.

STYLE

Developed from Elizabethan and similar to it. A tamer style; the ornament less pronounced, especially the curves and flourishes. A straight, sturdy style; squat and low.

Simple in structure and practical. Strength rather than grace.

To identify it look for the same structure as Elizabethan but with less assertive ornamentation. The "melon bulbs" especially are always smaller.

DETAILS

Lines; straight.

Proportions; rectangular, sturdy, low. All of the furniture of the time was low on account of the low ceilings.

Legs; straight, or turned in various designs. Small "melon bulb" used sometimes in table legs.

Feet; simple square or turned feet.

Arms; of chairs slanted downward as in Elizabethan.

Underbracing; always used to tie the legs together. Plain, sturdy and close to the floor as in the Elizabethan.

Ornament; furniture of period heavy with ornament. Consisted mostly of carving. Many repeats were used and the whole effect was more monotonous than the Elizabethan.

Motifs; mostly Renaissance as in Elizabethan.

Round arches a favorite motif. (Survival of Gothic and Elizabethan) (See cut No. 4). Strapwork (see top border in cut No. 1), interlacing bands, half circle patterns, grapevine, tulip, and rose designs. Diaper patterns, fluting and nulling.

Hardware and pulls; very simple iron hinges and small, inconspicuous pulls.

Materials; wood used was oak. Simple wax finish or none at all.

Upholstery; used to slight extent in homes of wealthy.

Characteristic pieces in use; stools, benches, and, in small numbers, chairs. Wainscot chairs like Elizabethan, and new types of side chairs (see cuts). Cupboards, large canopied beds, chests. Long, narrow refectory tables, and draw-top tables.

MODERN USE

The case goods reproduced from the Jacobean period is generally from the Late Jacobean. (See later.) Early Jacobean chairs similar to the cuts on this page are very charming and are reproduced now. Tables of this period are very popular in Early English styles.

Here we have again the straight, square effect. The carved ornament has characteristic motifs; round arches; strap work, (along top and sides); interlacing bands (between panels); channelling (along bottom).

An interesting and unique type. Notice substantial stretchers, and the Spanish style back. The characteristics are the uprights ending in finials and the carved and hooped crosspieces. Also the acorn pendants. Seats of period were high. Used footstools.

See the squat, square effect. Low underbracing. The finials of the uprights and the arcades of spindles are probably of Spanish influence. The arches between the spindles are Elizabethan. (Round arches were persistent in old English styles.)

Figure 4. JACOBAN CUPBOARD

An ancestor of our modern sideboard. Observe the square, low appearance as in all Jacobean pieces. The carving is well spread over the surfaces (this is typical). If the posts were Elizabethan they would have huge bulbous protuberances. The design here is typically Jacobean. Round arches, roses, lozenges, strap-work along the top.

Jacobean

The "Stuart" Double Service Suite

No. 280

Reflecting the elegance and character of the Jacobean Period under Charles II, this eight piece suite especially designed to gain an added room for the apartment or bungalow home, is a happy combination.

The charming octagonal "hundred legged" table extends to sixty inches. The finely made ladder back chair and spot chair have a real quality of comfort often lacking in ornate chairs. Just draw them up to the table and test their comfort and easy mobility.

Note that the Buffet-Console has drawers for silver on one side and a spacious compartment for linens on the other.

As a combination suite or by groups "The Stuart" is a combination of unusual artistry and inviting comfort, that will be a source of happiness in the home.

Cromwellian Period

Days of the Commonwealth

Time 1649-1660

Country-England in the times of Cromwell and the Commonwealth

OLIVER CROMWELL was Protector of England during this period. There had been much strife concerning civil and religious rights during the reign of Charles I. and finally the king was beheaded and the group of reformists of whom Cromwell was the leader, came into power. The atmosphere of the times was severely democratic—things were simple and austere. The furniture of the period displays the same spirit; there is no sense of luxury or frivolity as in some of the other furniture periods.

STYLE

A Puritan severity prevailed in Cromwellian times and the furniture was in accord with it. Severe in line and form. Decoration slight. Plainness was valued. Straight, stout and staunch.

DETAILS

Lines; straight.

Proportions; squat, square and rectangular.

General effect; plain and austere.

Legs; bulbous legs went out of fashion; legs were turned.

Feet; owing to Dutch influence bun or ball feet became common.

Underbracing; generally used; stout in effect; turned underbracing came into fashion.

Ornament; Cromwellian austerity frowned on the extravagant decoration of the preceding period. Less carving was used and simple turning and moldings supplied the decoration.

Mounts; plain iron mounts and simple round pulls.

Upholstery; began to be in more general use. Padded backs used for the first time as well as padded seats. Sombre-colored materials and leather used.

Materials; oak was still the wood in general use.

Characteristic pieces; besides the typical Jacobean pieces new types came into use; gate-leg tables, Welsh dressers, settles, and upholstered, square-backed chairs.

MODERN USE

Gate-leg tables have been popular ever since this period and have been especially so of late years in America. Welsh dressers are picturesque and much used. Dining room suites are sometimes made in the Cromwellian style, with the square-backed chairs and typical turnings.

This is not strictly a Cromwellian piece of furniture, but like the gateleg table began to be made in England about that time. It consists of a cupboard in the lower part with open shelves above for the display of utensils.

Typical of this period. Note the severity of the lines. Chairs first became common at this time; they were made in greater numbers and came into ordinary use by the common people who heretofore had sat on benches and stools. This was a democratic tendency of Cromwellian times. The low, square, upholstered back, as seen here, is typical of the Cromwellian chair.

While gateleg tables are not strictly Cromwellian they originated in England at about that time and have been popular ever since. The gateleg table is typically English; nothing like it is found in other European countries.

Late Jacobean Period

Also called Carolean, Late Stuart or Restoration

Time 1660-1689

Country-England in the reigns of Charles II and James II

CHARLES II, the "Merry Monarch," had been in exile in Flanders during the Commonwealth era. When he was brought back to the throne he brought with him a taste for luxury that he had learned on the Continent. This is reflected in the furniture of the times, along with many other foreign influences.

The stern frugality of Cromwellian times gave way to gayety and luxury. Sober morality was superseded by riotous living. The nation went from one extreme to the other.

STYLE

A return to more sumptuously decorated furnishings. The styles changed greatly at this time. Many foreign influences at work—Flemish and Dutch, (Charles II had been in exile in Flanders), French, Spanish, Portuguese, and Italian.

Fundamentally a straight-line style; lavish use of Flemish scroll ornament.

Easily recognized by its ornamentation; spiral turned legs (see cut No. 8), Flemish scrolls (see cuts No. 5, No. 6 and No. 7), and applied decoration of split balusters and geometrical moldings. (Cuts No. 1 and No. 2.)

DETAILS

Lines; straight, much softened by elaborately curved decoration in many cases.

Proportions; still rectangular, strong and simple, as in the preceding periods. Lighter and more graceful however.

General effect; richness.

Legs; typical leg was spiral turned as in cut No. 8. Just as much used was the Flemish scroll leg (See cut No. 5). Pear-shaped turned leg. (See cut No. 1.)

Feet; scrolled; pear-shaped; block.

Arms; of chairs, scrolled and flaring. (See cut No. 5.)

Underbracing; much used in all Early English and Jacobean styles. Often knob-turned or spiral-turned. An innovation was the use of elaborately carved and scrolled stretchers across front of chairs and softs. (See cuts No. 5 and No. 7.)

Ornament; chiefly carving and turning; some inlaying.

1. Flemish Scroll greatly used for legs, arms, and around backs of chairs. Also for front stretchers. (See cut No. 5.)

2. Spiral turning; very characteristic of the period. Due to Portuguese influence (was brought to Portugal from the East Indies by navigators).

3. Applied decorations on the fronts of cabinets, sideboard, tables, etc. This is of strictly Dutch influence.

Split balusters, pear- and diamond-shaped motifs, geometrical moldings of all kinds, were glued on the surfaces. (See cuts No. 1 and No. 2.)

4. Motifs often used in the carving were roses, graceful acanthus leaves, floral scrolls, and carved crowns, (a symbol of the restoration of the monarchy).

5. Paneling was much used, especially raised paneling.

Mounts; hardware was still simple and inconspicuous but more graceful and decorative than in the preceding periods. Brass hinges and pendant drops for pulls.

Upholstery; chairs and settees richly upholstered in gorgeous needlepoint, velvet or brocade. High, upholstered chair backs for the first time.

Materials; walnut first began to be used at this time. It was better suited to the scrolled carving than the oak that had always been used for English furniture.

MODERN USE

The Late Jacobean, or Charles II style is much used by modern designers and is very popular. Tables with spirally turned legs; high, ornamental hall chairs; table desks and sideboards ornamented with applied moldings and half spindles; all these may be seen in any good furniture store.

Used for the display of plate and for convenience in serving. The drawers are an advance on the preceding periods. Characteristic straight, square outlines and low stretchers. Turned legs and feet. Important; notice very carefully the ornament which places it accurately as Late Jacobean. Applied half-spindles outlining the panels, and the applied moldings in geometrical designs in the panels. Recessed panels. The hardware is more decorative than previously. Observe the brass mounts around the key-holes.

Figure 8

Continuing a style of the preceding periods. The structure is similar (with the exception of the use of drawers instead of doors.) Notice the supporting posts which in the Elizabethan would have been huge and bulbous. The decoration is typically Late Jacobean. Applied geometrical moldings and split balusters.

Compare this chair with one of similar style in the Spanish section. There are the spiral turnings, low, straight-topped back, and decoration of gilt nails. The Spanish style was carried to the Netherlands during the Spanish occupation, and from there went to England. (Remember that Charles II was in exile in the Netherlands).

Typical style of chair in fashion; high, open back with crested top. Caning began to be used now for the backs and seats. (Ladder-backs were also something new). This type is of distinctly Dutch and Flemish influence. Typical points to notice; the separate, turned uprights of the back, the carved front stretcher, the scrolled foot, (this kind called the "Spanish Scroll.") Decoration; carved acanthus leaves and the crown at the top signifying the return of the kingship.

High upholstered backs first used at this time. Slanted backward more than before. Notice the straight lines and rectangular effect so characteristic of Jacobean and all the English styles so far. Arms and legs of the Flemish scrolls. Carved and scrolled front stretcher a mark of this period. Splendid upholstery of needlework.

Day beds were much used in Jacobean times and are the ancestors of our modern couches. Observe the typical points of the Late Jacobean, or Charles II period; general richness of effect in a rectangular structure. Turned uprights of the back, scrolled legs and richly carved stretchers.

The settee, or sofa, developed in this time from the double or "courting" chairs of previous times. The structure the same as the chairs with the Flemish scroll stretchers and elaborate turning. Gorgeous needlework upholstery.

Figure 8. SMALL TABLE

In the time of Charles II small tables were first put in general use. The popularity of tea and coffee drinking was one reason for this. They were also used extensively for card games. Typical feature of this table is the spiral-turned legs which denote the period. Spiral turning is popular in modern times. Note the same general squareness of effect as in other Jacobean pieces.

William and Mary Period

Dutch Influence Appears in England

Time 1688-1702 Country - England during the reign of William and Mary

JAMES II became very unpopular with the English and fled from the country, leaving the throne to his daughter, Mary. She married William of Holland, and he, being of an assertive nature, became the real ruler, although Mary had far more right to the throne than he had. Through William a strong Dutch influence was exerted on the country; large numbers of courtiers came with him from Holland and they brought with them the styles of their own land. A good deal of furniture was brought over and these models instituted a new style of furniture in England.

The times were ripe for a new style—the English were rather tired of the old Jacobean furniture—the lighter, more graceful, more comfortable, Dutch styles appealed to them and were immediately accepted.

Mary was very domestic in her inclinations and interested in house furnishings. Her taste was excellent also and she exerted an important influence on the styles. The great interest taken in needlepoint work and embroideries of all kinds owed its inception to her.

Another influence during this time came with the Huguenot craftsmen who were driven out of France to England; they were skilled textile workers and cabinetmakers and they contributed a great deal toward making the new styles an improvement over the old.

STYLE

A subtle, graceful style in a combination of straight and curved lines, based on Dutch models, as William was a Hollander.

A complete revolution from preceding English styles. A lighter, more slender style; comfortable and domestic in feeling.

An easily recognized style. Look for turned legs with inverted cups (See cut No. 2); shaped and crossed stretchers (See cut No. 2); shaped aprons (See cut No. 2); and arched and hooded tops (See cuts No. 5 and 6.)

DETAILS

Lines; combination of straight and curved. Cabinet work rectangular. Arched and double arched tops on cabinets and backs of settees.

Proportions and size; slender, graceful proportions. Less heavy than in preceding periods. Pieces became tall to suit the high ceilings.

Structure; simple and well put together, in the English manner.

Backs; of chairs. High and rounded at the top; carved, caned or upholstered or in combinations. Slanted backwards somewhat. Central portion separated from the uprights and ending below in a cross rail above the seat line. (Sometimes, the part between the uprights and central portion was caned.)

Backs; of settees. Sometimes straight, generally double-hooded (See cut No. 6).

Seats; square in shape; no curves.

Legs;

1. Straight and turned with inverted cups. (See cuts No. 2 and No. 5.)
2. Octagonal or quadrangular in shape. (See cut No. 1.)
3. Dutch cabriole leg; used late in period. "Ringed" or "collared."
4. Flemish scroll leg.
5. Spiral-turned leg. Survival of Late Jacobean.

Feet;

1. Dutch bun foot.
2. Dutch ball and claw.
3. Spanish scroll. (Came through Holland.)
4. Block feet. On low chests of drawers, etc.

Arms; wood, flaring. Upholstered, rolled under.

Underbracing; much used. Was flat, and shaped (serpentine), and generally X shaped; sometimes with a finial at the intersection. (See cuts.)

Ornament;

1. Carving to some extent. Less used than in the preceding periods. The scroll work of the period just before (Late Jacobean), was practically dropped now. The Dutch cockle shell motif a favorite. Seen also in the next (Queen Anne) period.
2. Turning; the most characteristic legs used were a turned style with inverted, cup shape ornaments.
3. Shaped apron ornamentation with pendants. (See cut No. 2.)

4. Marquetry. Exceedingly popular in the William and Mary period. (See cut No. 1.) Another Dutch style brought to England. Elaborate floral and seaweed patterns were most used.

5. Veneering; first began to be used to any extent.

6. Lacquer work; the Dutch brought knowledge of lacquer from the Orient, and from Holland it spread to England where it was very much the rage.

7. Painting and gilding were used largely. Rich color effects were popular in this period.

Mounts; small ornamental hinges and key-plates. Knobs, bail-handles, and pear-shaped drop handles.

Materials; walnut was the principal wood in use. Changed from solid woods to veneering and marquetry (inlay).

Upholstery; great attention was paid to upholstery in this period. Making needlework coverings was fashionable. Brocades, damasks, velvets, and figured chintzes were also popular.

Colors; this was a very colorful time and the colors used were strong and vigorous; reds, blues, and greens, emphasized by gilding. Color in the upholstery and painted and lacquered woods. Richly colored hangings and Chinese wall papers.

Characteristic pieces; chairs and upholstered stools.

Small tables and folding tables; long refectory tables were out of style.

Beds; exceedingly tall with slender posts sixteen feet high in many cases. Elaborate hangings.

Chests of drawers first in general use at this time. Highboys and lowboys.

The secretary bookcase was evolved in this period.

China cupboards came into fashion on account of the fad for china-collecting started by Queen Mary.

Tall clocks appeared at this time. They were elaborately decorated with marquetry.

MODERN USE

The William and Mary style is admirably adapted to present day homes, and furniture after that period is used all over America. It is attractive, simple, and elegant, and not difficult to reproduce.

William and Mary Period

Typically William and Mary. Turned, inverted-cup legs. Bun feet. Serpentine, X-shaped stretchers. Flat arched "apron" with pendant ornaments. Large tables out of style; small tables were much in demand for coffee, tea, and gaming, writing and dressing.

Caning was much employed in this period; often the caned panel was separate from the up-rights of the back. Typical William and Mary legs and serpentine stretchers.

Compare this chair with a Late Jacobean (period preceding this) chair. Same high, crested back. Same square seat. Legs turned instead of scrolled. Bun feet instead of scrolled.

Showing typical William and Mary details. Double-hooded top. Inverted cup-turned legs. Shaped flat stretchers in X-form. Bun feet. Pendant handles.

Settees had first been used in the Late Jacobean (Charles II) style immediately preceding this. Characteristic William and Mary double-hooded back. Rolled-over arms. Shaped outline below seat. Serpentine stretchers. Spanish scroll feet; influence came through Holland from Spain. Upholstery; needle-point. Queen Mary popularized the making of these coverings.

Queen Anne Period

Lighter and More Graceful

Time 1702-1714

Country - England during the reign of Queen Anne

A CURVED line, plain surface style in walnut. Lighter and more graceful than the preceding styles. (Observe the steady progress in this direction from one period to the next.)

A quaint, comfortable style with rounded surfaces to fit the body.

Dutch influences modified into a genuine English style.

To recognize look for: 1. Cabriole legs (the most distinctive mark of the period.

See cuts). 2. No stretchers. 3. Cockle shell carvings. 4. Solid fiddle-shaped splats in backs of chairs. 5. Flat arches or pediments surmounting cabinets, etc.

DETAILS

Lines; curved—legs, seats and backs of chairs, tops of cabinets, decorative aprons; and some of the case work kettle-shaped.

Proportions; light, graceful. Greater height to suit higher ceilings.

General effect; quaint, comfortable and home-like. Compare with palatial styles such as Elizabethan or Italian Renaissance.

Legs; cabriole in shape. A very distinctive mark of the period. Taken from Dutch models. (See Dutch period cuts.)

Note the great change in legs from all the preceding English periods. The turned legs of the preceding William and Mary period went completely out of fashion.

Feet; most characteristic were club feet of various shapes. (See cut No. 1.) Others used were web shape and Spanish scroll. (See cut No. 2.)

Straight bracket feet on heavy cabinets.

Arms; curved and flaring outwards.

Underbracing; lacking in this period. Observe this as a pronounced change. Strong underbracing a characteristic of English styles heretofore.

Ornament; very simple in ornamentation.

Surfaces were kept plain without moldings or paneling. Fine veneering was much used on these plain surfaces.

Lacquer work was popular; marquetry inlay went out of vogue.

Cockle shell carving the most-used ornament. Placed on the knees of cabriole legs, on the cresting of chair backs, in the middle of drawers and aprons.

Seats; rounded. Notice that the seats heretofore have always been rectangular.

Chair backs; lower than those used before this time. They have gradually decreased in height from Elizabethan times.

The characteristic mark is the solid fiddle-shaped splat (See cut No. 1), with curved uprights and sweeping curved top. Chair backs often "spooned" or shaped to fit body. The splats in succeeding periods (Early Georgian, Chippendale), were generally pierced or decorated and must be distinguished from the Queen Anne solid splat. Chair backs narrow.

Upholstery; much used. Damask, chintzes, needlework, etc.

Materials; walnut the principal wood used. Some mahogany.

Characteristic pieces; by this time almost every type of furniture was in use. Small tables were very popular.

Dining tables were of the drop-leaf variety. China cabinets, especially the three-cornered kind, are characteristic of the period. Chests of drawers, highboys, and lowboys, were in great vogue. Beds had tall slender posts supporting testers.

MODERN USE

No style of furniture has been more popularly used in modern reproductions than the Queen Anne. It is simple, home-like and livable, and with a charm all its own.

Highboys had become popular in the William and Mary period preceding this and now they became increasingly so. The style spread to the American colonies where they were always much the vogue. Typical cabriole legs and bail handles here.

Early Georgian Period

A Style Similar to Queen Anne

Time 1714-1760

Country - England during the reigns of George I and George II

A STYLE similar to Queen Anne. The same forms were used with heavier effect and more elaborate ornamentation. Numerous new motifs were used in the decoration where the Queen Anne used only the cockle shell.

A domestic style with the same Dutch influences as Queen Anne. A more vigorous style.

To recognize look for the Queen Anne characteristics in heavier and more elaborate form. Chair backs lower and square in shape comparatively.

DETAILS

Characteristics much the same as Queen Anne. (See opposite page.)

Legs; heavier cabriole with heavy shoulders and a good deal of carved ornament. Lions' heads were used among other motifs.

Feet; claw and ball. Paw feet. Hoof feet.

Seats; more square in shape than the typical Queen Anne.

Backs; of chairs. Tend to be more square than those in the Queen Anne period. Splats were used as before but they were not solid and plain. Some were pierced and some highly carved.

Ornament; more used than in Queen Anne. Principally fine carving, executed with great boldness and vigor. The use of carving increased with the vogue for mahogany. Motifs; many new motifs were used in addition to the Queen Anne cockle shell. Lions' heads, and paws, satyr-masks, cabochon and leaf, eagle head terminations.

MODERN USE

Styles called Early Georgian enjoy popularity along with Queen Anne and other kindred styles that came into being in the eighteenth century.

Small tables were much in demand by this time, particularly for games of cards. Georgian characteristics shown here—cabriole legs with heavy shoulders and vigorous claw feet.

(Metropolitan Museum)

A good example of the heavy elegance of the Georgian style. Observe the elaboration of the splat of the back, and the satyr-mask decoration on the knees of the legs.

(Metropolitan Museum)

Queen Anne characteristics executed in a heavier and more florid taste. Note the heaviness of the cabriole legs.

Figure 4.
GEORGIAN BEDSTEAD
Of mahogany which began to be imported about this time. The growing use of mahogany explains the vigorous and excellent carving of the Early Georgian and Chippendale styles. The elaborate and heavily carved tester of this bed is typically Georgian; also the heavy claw feet.

Thomas Chippendale

The Master Cabinet Maker

Influence 1750-1780

Country - England

THOMAS Chippendale was an English cabinet-maker who had a shop in London immediately after the Early Georgian period. He was the first cabinet-maker to attach his name to a style.

Chippendale was a master of furniture making; he displayed the greatest ability as a designer, he was without rival as a carver, and he was a wonderful craftsman. He adapted ideas from many other periods and other countries, from France and far-away China, from the Gothic period, and so on. Yet he always made them into something individual and harmonious, into something English. Whatever he touched he almost invariably improved.

Chippendale was an excellent business man as well as artist. He originated the idea of playing host to prospective customers and inviting them to come and drink tea in his salons where his finest furniture was displayed. These show-rooms of his became a rendezvous of art and fashion. It was quite the thing for the London fashionables to drop in there.

STYLE

A substantial, richly carved style in mahogany with free use of curves. Graceful and beautifully proportioned. Adapted from different styles. Different pieces showed different influences—Gothic, Early Georgian, French, Chinese.

To recognize: in general, substantial beautiful pieces whose decoration is marvelous carving.

DETAILS

Lines; combination of straight lines and flowing curves.

Proportions; substantial but not bulky or heavy; an impression of lightness and grace.

General effect; exceedingly rich and elegant and beautiful.

Structure; sound in every respect. Everything was put together in such a masterly way that much has survived in perfect condition.

Legs;

1. Cabriole or bandy leg (from preceding Early Georgian and Queen Anne. Originally Dutch). Chippendale used it on his Georgian and French style pieces. (See cuts No. 5, 8 and 9.)
2. Straight leg. Used on his Gothic and Chinese styles. Both kinds richly ornamented as a rule. (See cuts No. 6 and 12.)

Feet;

1. Claw and ball the most characteristic of style. Used with cabriole legs. (See cuts No. 5 and 8.)
2. Other feet used with cabriole legs were club, web, scroll, leaf, paw, dolphin, and slipper. Straight legs rarely had any distinct feet.
3. Bracket feet on large cabinets. (See cut No. 12.)

Arms; curved and flaring at ends.

Joined uprights at an angle. (See cuts.) Supports shaped forward to side rails of seat. Notice this especially as it is most characteristic. In the Chinese style the arms are canted. (See Cut No. 4.)

Underbracing; used in some pieces, in other styles not at all. Used in straight-legged chairs but not in cabriole-legged. The front stretcher of the straight-legged chairs was nearly always recessed. Stretchers when used quite ornate.

Backs; approximately square in outline with serpentine-shaped top. The hooped shaped tops of Queen Anne disappeared. Straight uprights. (Those of Early Georgian and Queen Anne were curved, remember.)

Backs were broad and flat. Spooning was not used.

Decoration; pierced or interlacing forms of some kind, often following the general lines of a splat.

1. Splat back. Pierced or interlacing in different designs. Notice that the Chippendale splat always comes down and is joined with the seat. Hepplewhite and Sheraton (styles following) ended their designs in a rail above the seat.
2. Ribband back. Elaborate design of knotted ribbons.
3. Fret back. With the back filled with fret-work.
4. Ladder back. A number of horizontal bars.
5. Square back. Found in padded backed chairs and in some Chinese fret-work patterns.

Seats; straight lines; (compare with rounded Queen Anne seats) broad and flat and tapering toward the back. Chippendale chairs have much larger seats than are used in modern chairs. A few of his French pieces had slightly shaped seats.

Ornament; Chippendale decoration consisted of elaborate and intricate carving. Veneering was also used.

Motifs; Scrolls were used very freely. Acanthus leaves were a favorite motif. Knotted ribbons and interlacing straps (in open work).

Fretwork; for edges, tops, etc.

Gothic openwork fret patterns, resembling stained-glass window design. (See Gothic period. Also pointed arches.)

French ornament, rococo shells among others.

Chinese fretwork, pagodas, etc.

Lions' heads and masques from the Georgian period preceding were still in use. Inlay was not used at all.

Mounts; Chippendale believed in the decorative qualities of fretted and pierced brass mounts and often they were quite elaborate. On plain furniture they were kept simple.

Mounts were handles and key-plates.

Material; the wood used was almost entirely mahogany. It was admirably adapted to the intricate carving. Being brought from a great distance across the ocean it was not very plentiful and hence tended to make furniture construction lighter.

Upholstery; the seats of Chippendale chairs were unusually well upholstered. French brocades, needlepoint, and leather.

Characteristic pieces; by this time almost every article of furniture in modern use was being made and used. Sideboards as we know them came later than this period. Side tables supplied the same need. Book-cases were an important item in the Chippendale style. They were of large size. Heretofore there had not been many books in private homes.

MODERN USE

Chippendale styles supply a great deal of inspiration for modern furniture designers. The more elaborate pieces were expensive even in Chippendale's time. Accordingly the reproductions are high-priced in these days. However there was a wealth of design in his style that is drawn upon for ideas for simpler pieces.

The Adam Brothers

Architects and Designers

Time 1760-1792

Country - England - Contemporary with Chippendale, Hepplewhite, and Sheraton

ROBERT and James Adam, sons of a Scotch architect, and who worked in London during the last half of the eighteenth century were the originators of this style. They were architects and designers rather than craftsmen and their furniture designs were executed by others.

Robert Adam spent many years studying ancient Roman architectural remains and was one of the greatest authorities on this subject. This classic style was the basis of the Adam style. The brothers executed many important architectural commissions in England and designed furniture of the same classic style to harmonize with them.

The Adam style was a most important influence. It introduced forms and motifs totally different from those that had been in use and made a radical change in the forms of furniture.

STYLE

A slender, refined, straight-line style; founded on classical types discovered at Pompeii in Italy about this time. (This discovery was of the same interest to the world of that time as the recent discovery of King Tutankhamen's tomb has been to us.) The furniture of the Louis XVI period in France was of a slightly later date and very much like the Adam style.

To recognize look for slender, straight-lined pieces with tapering legs and flat surfaces. The characteristic classical ornament (painted, inlaid, or carved in low relief), makes it very easy to recognize. See "Ornament."

DETAILS

Lines; straight-lined and rectangular. A few curved lines were used (semi-circular tables and oval chair backs).

Proportions; small, slender, graceful. Style marked by very exquisite proportions. Light in effect.

General effect; elegant, graceful; rich in a refined way.

Cabinet work; rectangular with flat surfaces. Straight tops finished with slender moldings.

Legs and feet;

1. Tapered with spade feet. (See cut No. 1 and No. 6.)
2. Round and fluted with turned feet. (See cut No. 7.)

Arms; slightly curved out from back, then brought sharply forward to seat. (See cuts.)

Backs; low; openwork, or upholstered.

1. Square back. (See cut No. 5.)
2. Oval back. (See cut No. 6.)

Seats;

1. Square in outline; tapered toward back. (See cut No. 5.)
2. Curved in front and rounded at sides. (See cut No. 6.)

Underbracing; used only occasionally. Some chairs with straight stretchers and the front one recessed. (See cut No. 6.) Some chairs with X-shaped stretchers. Most chairs without stretchers, as in cut No. 5.

Mouldings; narrow and delicately proportioned.

Ornament; this style is distinguished more by its ornament than by its structure; graceful and delicate ornament from classical sources.

1. Small, round or oval shapes are constantly seen in Adam decoration, generally with fan-shaped disks inclosed.
2. Grooving or fluting a distinguishing mark of Adam style. Often placed perpendicularly on rails, alternating with small ornaments. (See cut No. 7.)
3. Adam urn, or vase, very characteristic and much used. (See cuts No. 4 and No. 7.)
4. The classical lyre was used, as in cut No. 5. (Recall that another classical style, the Empire, made much use of the lyre.)

5. Classical architectural motifs were used; Ionic capitals, and egg and dart moldings.

6. Draped classical figures were popular in Adam designs, also swags of drapery, floral pendants, drops of husks, fruits, ram's heads.

Types of ornamentation:

1. Carving was not used lavishly as with Chippendale. Restrained and in low relief.
2. Inlay was much used. (Recall that Chippendale used none at all.) Satinwood and other rare woods.
3. Painting and gilding; very popular. Many pieces were made of common woods and painted or gilded. Satinwood was used as a background for painted designs in the classical style. (See cut No. 2.) Famous artists, such as Angelica Kaufman, executed them for the Adam brothers and this style is very typical of their furniture.

Materials; mahogany was still used, particularly for carved pieces. Pine and other common woods were used for painted or gilded pieces. Satinwood and many other kinds of rare woods were popular at this time.

Upholstery; delicate French brocades were well suited to this elegant style of furniture.

MODERN USE

The Adam style is deservedly popular in modern times, with its slender lines and elegant simplicity. It is often adapted for bedroom suites, dining suites, and console tables. For some reason the Adam style was not in vogue in America during the eighteenth century and so is not seen in Colonial styles. The Adam's English contemporaries, Chippendale, Hepplewhite, and Sheraton, were exceedingly popular in America at that time.

Study the shaped ends. They come from classical models; the same rolled effect may be seen in Empire pieces. (The Empire style remember had ancient Roman models for its inspiration.) Fluted tapered legs, four on each side. Classic ornament carved along side rails.

Characteristic Adam decorations. Painted design on the top; notice the classical draped figures such as are found in Greek art. Observe the small, dainty, classical ornament on the underframing and legs. (Decorated underframing is typically Adam.) Semi-circular shape. The Adams brought console tables to a high state of perfection; they were popularly used in elegant homes as decoration.

Once belonged to David Garrick. See the simplicity of this bed compared to those of previous styles. Slender, fluted posts set on square plinths. Painted and gilded. The hangings are India cotton prints, which just lately have been revived to favor in America.

Adam sideboards had a square pedestal at each end. Often the center part was a separate table and quite long. This example is of finely carved mahogany with Adam style motifs. Notice oval ornaments alternating with grooving on underframing. Very typical.

Square back type. Typically low. Seat square and tapered. Legs; tapered and fluted. Characteristic arms brought low towards the front. Classical lyre ornament; much used by the Adams.

Typical rectangular shape. Fluted legs and turned feet. Decoration of classical motifs.

George Hepplewhite

An Original Designer

Time of influence last part of 18th Century 1770-1790

Country - England during reign of George III. Contemporary history; reign of Louis XVI in France.
War of Independence in America.

GEORGE HEPPLEWHITE was a London cabinet-maker who worked at the same time as Sheraton and the Adam brothers, and slightly later than Chippendale. He developed an individual style in furniture and his designs were in popular use in both England and America. He was very original and at the same time, practical; hence his influence was widespread and important. There are few styles to which present day designers owe as much as to the Hepplewhite style.

STYLE

A light, graceful, elegant style with more tendency toward curved lines than straight. Emphasis on beauty of line.

A dainty style based on sturdy English structural qualities; a real achievement.

Refined and free from eccentricities.

An original and individual style based on contemporary influences as follows:

1. Adam influence (Classic). Refinement and daintiness. Classic ornament.

2. French influence. The elegant severity of the Louis XVI furniture which came into being at this time appealed very much to Hepplewhite. He made exact copies many times.

3. Sheraton influence. These two men borrowed much from each other.

To recognize look for elegant, graceful, straight-legged forms. Serpentine fronts. Concave, cut-in corners. Shield shapes (backs of chairs, mirrors). Peculiar short curved arms. Wheat ears, Prince of Wales feathers (three plumes tied together), bell-flower husks, much used in decorations.

DETAILS

Lines; curved lines emphasized in this style. (Legs an important exception; they were always straight.) Cabinets straight in line with straight tops, sometimes broken by a slight arch in the middle. Some tables circular or semi-circular. Typical Hepplewhite lines are seen on the fronts of chests of drawers and sideboards; a serpentine line, concave (that is curved in at the ends). Sheraton always used a convex, or swelling out, curve. This is a very important distinction to remember.

Proportions; small and dainty; slender but not as slender and narrow as in Sheraton furniture. English sturdiness was still evident but not as strong as in Chippendale.

General effect; dainty and rich, yet substantial. Elegant, free, and buoyant.

Structure; superb. Hepplewhite was a master craftsman; he made very elegant, dainty furniture that still possessed the soundest of structure.

Legs; always straight. Mark the departure of the cabriole leg.

1. Square and tapered, ending in spade foot (most typical leg). (See cuts 4 and 8.) Panelling down face of leg a characteristic Hepplewhite detail.
2. Tapered round leg also used. Sometimes grooved; sometimes reeded and entwined with carved spiral band.
3. Back legs of chairs curved backward.

Feet;

1. Spade foot a characteristic Hepplewhite detail. (See cuts 4 and 8.)
2. Splayed out French foot popularized by Hepplewhite. (See cut 1.) Sometimes on chair legs in a slight outward flare.

Arms; very typical of the style. Quite slender; join sides of back posts, spring away in a curve. Curve in to joint supports which are really a continuation of the arms. Supports slope down in a reverse curve and join sides of seat far back from the corner. (See cuts 6, 7 and 8.)

Backs; of chairs. Perhaps the most original point of the style.

1. Shield shape back most distinctive of the style. (See cut 8.)
2. Hoop back. (See cut 9.)
3. Interlacing heart back. (See cut 6.)
4. Oval back. (See cut 7.)

Notice that the designs in the backs are not joined to the seat but are supported by a rail above the seat. (Remember that Chippendale's designs always joined the seat.)

The backs of Hepplewhite chairs are supported by a slender curved neck (continuations of back legs). Observe that the designs in the backs are quite open and delicate in effect. Designs used were the lyre, urn, S curved members, honeysuckle, Prince of Wales feathers.

Seats;

1. Rounded, in something of a shield shape like the backs.
2. Square and tapering toward the back. Usually upholstered. An important point to notice is that Hepplewhite chairs usually have the upholstering brought down over the seat frame.

Underbracing; used in some pieces. Front stretcher of chairs recessed.

Ornament;

1. Painting was a favorite decoration. Painted decorations and panels.
2. Carving was delicate and light.
3. Inlay used but not as much as with Sheraton.
4. Veneering used.

Motifs; many of them were the same as the Adam style. Some borrowed from Louis XVI ornamentation.

1. Wheat heads a characteristic.
2. Inverted bell-flower husks, floral swags, honeysuckle.
3. Prince of Wales plumes much used. (Characteristics of Hepplewhite style.)
4. Reeding and beading.
5. Urns or vases. Shells. Fans.
6. Lyre design very popular.
7. Shield shape typically Hepplewhite. (Backs of chairs.) Fronts of doors and drawers plain in effect. Panels were rectangular in shape. (Sheraton's were oval.)

Materials; mahogany was still much in favor but Hepplewhite used the lighter woods such as satinwood and rosewood, more than anyone else had ever done. Tulipwood, hawthorn and other rare woods were used for inlaying.

Upholstery; light brocades; colored haircloth with brass nails. Rush seats were in use also.

Mounts; of brass in delicate designs. The plates were oval, oblong, octagonal, or round. Brass knobs used and also bail handles.

Characteristic pieces; all modern forms of furniture in use.

Hepplewhite paid a great deal of attention to the making of sideboards. He was the first to put the sideboard in its modern form.

Highboys and lowboys had gone out of fashion and chests of drawers alone were made.

Dressing tables became popular.

Table desks with knee-holes were made. Beds were far simpler with less carving. Fluted posts.

Stools had gone out of fashion by this time. Settees were longer. Curved backs and rolled over arms. Eight legs. Sometimes with the back curving around to form the arms after the French style.

Long chair-back settees were made with the same structure and design as Hepplewhite chairs.

MODERN USE

The Hepplewhite style is widely in vogue today. It meets with modern ideas of light, graceful forms in furniture. Few changes are made from the original models. Whatever the style changes may be Hepplewhite furniture may always be found in homes of good taste.

Particularly adapted to bedroom suites on account of its daintiness. Changes have to be made in the beds as the four-poster with tester is no longer in fashion. Hepplewhite dining room sets are successful; the chairs give a very distinctive effect.

Typical serpentine front with curved-in ends (same as the sideboard. Cut 5.) Oval mounts. Study the feet carefully as they are the splayed out French feet that Hepplewhite made popular in his style.

Observe the elegant simplicity here. Curved top and rolled over arms. Another type of sofa had the straight back curved around to form the arms after the French manner. Notice the four tapered legs across the front.

(Metropolitan Museum)

The important thing to notice here is the serpentine front, curving in at the ends. Hepplewhite always used this concave curve while Sheraton used the convex, or swelling out curve on his sideboards. Typical front with rectangular panels and oval mounts. Straight tapered legs with spade feet. Notice that there are six legs. Hepplewhite the first to make this modern type of sideboard.

ing mark of Hepplewhite. Straight tapered legs; rear ones curved out. Typical spade feet. Stretchers not used here. Characteristic curved seat with the upholstery brought down over the seat rail in Hepplewhite's manner.

Last of Golden Age of Furniture Making

Time 1750-1806 Country-England. Contemporary History; France; end of Louis XVI influence and begining of Napoleonic era. America; peace with England

THOMAS SHERATON was an English designer and cabinetmaker, the last one of the "Golden Age of Furniture Making." Chippendale had preceded him and Hepplewhite and the Adam Brothers worked at practically the same time. Sheraton was the important influence of the last part of the eighteenth century and the first part of the nineteenth.

Sheraton was a great genius but a poor business man. He had so many talents and undertook so many enterprises that he failed to make a success of anything and died he had lived, in poverty and disappointment. He was designer, cabinetmaker, publisher, preacher, author and drawing master.

STYLE

Sheraton was the champion of the straight-line and geometrical forms and this is the keynote of his style. He took severe lines and by assembling them in perfect proportion made a thing of grace and beauty. He was immersed in classic principles and his style is sometimes called the "English Louis XVI." Louis XVI was also a classic, straight-line style.

Sheraton had excellent judgment and a wonderful sense of proportion. His work shows dignity, refinement, and much restraint.

It is a slender, straight-line style with flat surfaces and restrained ornamentation, principally of inlays.

DETAILS

Lines; straight lines with a few curves. Simplicity of line, delicacy and severity. Emphasis on perpendicular lines, giving a "high-shouldered" look to his cabinetwork. Proportions; small, delicate and refined. Slender and narrow in comparison with width.

Structure; excellent in spite of the delicate effect. Sheraton knew where to strengthen and reinforce.

Legs; exceedingly slender, and always straight.

1. Most typical leg was round, tapered and reeded. Sometimes in cabinetwork was carried to the top forming a pillared ornament.
2. Square and tapered like the typical Hepplewhite leg; often enriched with inlays.
3. Later tables had legs with very close spiral-turning and acanthus decoration at the top.

Feet; very inconspicuous.

1. Simple continuation of turned leg.
2. Spade foot (like Hepplewhite).
3. Block foot.
4. French foot; on cabinets and sometimes feet of chairs were splayed out in a curve.

Arms; very characteristic. They start high on the uprights of the chair back and curve down in a very flat S shape to the supports which are straight vase-like forms, fluted or reeded. (See cuts.)

Backs; low, open, square, backs filled with slender forms or caning. Either straight or slightly curved. Slender uprights generally a continuation of the back legs; straight or curved backward; sometimes reeded.

1. The most characteristic Sheraton back was square with a central panel rising slightly above the top rail. (See cut 3.)
2. A later type had a broad, flat rail at the top of a very low back and was hollowed in or curved over at the top.

Motifs used in chair backs were vertical bars, horizontal bars, diagonal lattices, vase motif, lyre motif.

Seats;

1. Generally square and tapering toward back.
2. Some slightly rounded. Caning much used for seats; also upholstery and leather. Showed seat rail often.

Underbracing; more used than in Hepplewhite style, especially in tables where they are often X-shaped. Stretchers seldom used on chairs.

Ornament; Sheraton's theory of ornament was that it should be subservient to the structure of furniture. His decoration was very restrained, delicate, and well-balanced in distribution.

1. Inlay was favorite decoration. Rare and beautiful woods.
2. Carving; delicate and light in effect. Very subservient.
3. Turning, veneering and painting were used.
4. Tambour work (small sections of wood glued on a flexible backing).

Motifs; the oval is much used in the Sheraton style.

The lyre, slender, vase-shapes, and lattice work are very characteristic.

Swags, the conch shell, the star, fan shapes, square and round shapes, water leaf pattern.

Reeding and fluting a typical mark of the style; close spiral turning used toward last.

Materials; rich, dark mahogany. Satinwood and rare woods for inlays.

Mounts; similar to those of Hepplewhite. Oval or octagonal brass plates with ring handles. Bail handles. Lion's heads with ring handles.

MODERN USE

The force of Sheraton design is felt everywhere in modern times. No furniture is better fitted for modern use; it is light, graceful and simple and adapted to almost any room in the house. It gives an impression of refinement of taste.

Thomas Shearer, a cabinetmaker of the time, worked in a style very similar to both Sheraton and Hepplewhite, and reproductions named after him are seen occasionally now.

Notice the low back with its geometrical ornament. Typical Sheraton arms curving down from the back and supported by a vase-like member. Study the straight-line effect which is typical of Sheraton.

Sheraton made many small tables. Pembroke tables had rectangular leaves. Typical straight, slender, fluted legs. X shaped stretchers a mark of Sheraton tables.

Colonial Styles

*Landing of Pilgrims 1620. Declaration of Independence, 1776.
Alliance with France, 1778. Naval War with England, 1812.*

Time 1620-1830

Eastern United States

THE Colonial style is a mixture of many styles and to understand it one must know almost all of the English periods and styles, also Dutch forms of furniture. The Empire style (period of French influence) came later in the nineteenth century and is not classed as Colonial.

Colonial furniture then, is an interpretation and adaptation of English and Dutch styles; there are small differences and individualities but the fundamental ideas are the same. It is called Colonial because used in the homes of our Colonial ancestors. There is a large historical and sentimental value to these styles.

Early American furniture was of a different type from the Colonial furniture used in Revolutionary times and after. The Puritans and other early settlers led a strenuous life in the development of the new country; it was a time of hardships and limited means. Their furniture expressed the needs of the time perfectly. It was sturdy, plain and dignified, without furbelows or fancies.

Most colonial settlers were of English origin although the Dutch had settled New Amsterdam, later to be New York. All these people brought various articles of furniture with them when they left the Old World; naturally these were the models used when new articles were made in the new country. Then too, artisans tended to make the same styles of furniture that they had in the old country. Later on when the colonies became more settled and prosperous many fine pieces of furniture were imported from England and served as models for new styles.

Most pieces of furniture made in America, particularly in the earlier days, tended to be simpler, plainer and sturdier than the foreign models. Simple forms predominate in the Colonial style; there is nothing complex or elaborate about it. People of those times had other things to think about than elaboration. The furniture is typical of pioneer days—straightforward, durable and practical. But it is full of charm in its simplicity.

The periods and styles covered by the Colonial are:

1. Dutch, through the Dutch settlers of New Amsterdam.

2. Elizabethan and Jacobean (in vogue in England at the time of the first settlements.)
3. William and Mary; the Dutch-English style.
4. Queen Anne; very popular in America. This cabriole-legged style lingered for many years.
5. Early Georgian and Chippendale; up to the time of the Revolution.
6. Sheraton and Hepplewhite; after the Revolution and in the first part of the nineteenth century.

DETAILS

Materials; woods that were native to the country were used as a rule. Oak, pine, ash, hickory, and gum. Apple, cherry and pear wood. Maple very interestingly used and characteristic of American furniture alone. Imported mahogany began to be used about 1710 and many fine Colonial pieces are made of this wood. Native black walnut of a particularly beautiful color was in popular use.

Reed and rush were much used for seats.

Mounts; are one of the beauties of Colonial furniture. At first of hand-wrought iron and later of brass, used very decoratively. (See cuts.)

Construction; sometimes not as good as the English but generally very fine, particularly later.

Decoration; typical of the different periods. As a rule not much decoration was used. Surfaces were kept plain to show the beauty of the grain of the wood. Spiral carving such as Sheraton used was popular and pineapple finials have come to be associated with the Colonial style.

MODERN USE

Colonial reproductions of course are much used in America and are deservedly popular in their charming simplicity. Modern makers lighten many Colonial reproductions in accordance with the modern requirement for the light and practical. This style of furniture is very charming and suitable in a Colonial style house, so many of which are being built nowadays.

The gateleg table is entirely of English origin, there is nothing like it in other European countries. It is a typical piece of Colonial furniture and of late years has returned to popular favor along with the widespread interest in all things Colonial. Refectory tables were much used also in Colonial times.

Made about 1760. This style of table is always associated with the Colonial. The tops were made to tilt and stand against the wall. Notice the pie crust edge of this model.

About 1670. Originated in the American colonies. The name comes from the swinging supports that have the shape of butterfly wings. Notice the sturdy, rather primitive structure; the canted-out legs and the substantial stretchers.

Figure 13. DOUBLE COMB-BACK WINDSOR

The Windsor chair originated in England and is named after the town of Windsor near which is Windsor castle. They were first made in the seventeenth century and began with plain uprights and stick legs without stretchers; simply a wheelwright's crude attempt at a practical chair. A few were brought to America on the early ships. They were always popular in the colonies; a review of colonial newspapers will disclose many advertisements of Windsor chairs. The period of greatest use was 1740-1820. Thomas Jefferson sat in a Windsor chair when he signed the Declaration of Independence. The first forms were more substantial than beautiful; later they developed much grace of line. There were many variations of the backs and other details; they were made either with or without arms or rockers. Native woods were used—hickory, ash, beech, elm; mahogany but rarely. Frequently painted, red, black or green. The characteristics of the Windsor chair is the saddle seat and the complete separation between the uprights of the back and the legs. Windsor chairs have always had a strong general appeal. Their virtues are many; simple graceful lines, appealing comfort, usefulness and adaptability to surroundings. They have been revived to popularity lately, especially for informal uses such as clubs and unpretentious homes. With a gate-leg table they make a wonderfully attractive and comfortable dining-room set.

American Empire Period

Succeeded Colonial Styles

Time 1795-1830

United States

AT THIS time the admiration for French things and the dislike for British caused a radical change in furniture styles. The light, graceful style of Sheraton gradually merged into the American interpretation of the florid, pompous spirit of the French Empire which dominated furniture design for the first quarter of the nineteenth century.

American Empire has the same general characteristics as French Empire (see Empire period). However, some modifications were made by the American cabinet-makers. Duncan Phyfe, the splendid New York furniture maker (see following pages) did much to redeem the style. Some American Empire furniture is very good and much is bad; that made in the early part of the period is best.

DETAILS

Lines; In this period a lavish massing of material is substituted for good lines and finely-wrought detail.

Cabinet work was rectangular; shaped and serpentine piece went out of fashion. Straight and curved lines both used.

Proportions; large, massive, and often unwieldy. Contours lost their delicacy. Heavy cornices used.

Structure; very substantial and solid.

Legs;

1. Straight.
2. Outward curved (classic style). (See cut 2.)

Feet; feet of chair legs were continuations of legs.

Feet of sofas, sideboards, etc., winged claw, bear's or lion's claws, scroll, bracket, or large turned feet.

Arms; of chairs—start near the top of the back and after curving down go straight forward and terminate in a scroll.

Of sofas; rolled over arms in various designs. (See cut 1.)

Backs; low and simple in design. The top rail almost always curved to fit the figure; often rolled over. This is a classic Greek detail. The uprights were sometimes scrolled slightly over (another Greek detail). One very characteristic type of chair for this period was that with the uprights curving down onto the seat like tiny arms. For pictures of Empire chairs see Phyfe style following.

Decoration of backs:

1. Cross bar between uprights.
2. Slat motif such as the lyre.

Seats; generally square.

Underbracing; stretchers often used on chairs. The tables were generally supported by pedestals.

Moldings; heavy.

Ornament; in the French Empire metal mounts were the principal form of decoration but in the American version they were used to a lesser extent and carving took their place.

1. Carving.
2. Gilded carving.
3. Metal mounts.
4. Stenciled furniture came in about 1820.
5. Scrolls were much used; heavy scrolled supports and ornaments. (See cut 2.)
6. Heavy cornices. (See cut 4.)
7. Columns are a very characteristic decoration of the Empire; used as table supports and on the fronts of cabinet work, sides of mirrors, etc.

Motifs; Acanthus leaves. The lyre. The pineapple (symbol of hospitality). The cornucopia. Lion claw, bear paw, and winged griffin feet. Reeding.

Materials; a rich, dark mahogany was used to the exclusion of almost everything else. The doubtful practice of artificially reddened mahogany came in at this time and it has only been within recent years that we have known what the natural mahogany color was like.

Mounts;

1. Round brass pulls; or lion's heads, or open flowers with ring handles.
2. Pressed glass knobs were very popular.

Characteristic pieces;

1. Sofas were very important and some of the best work of the time was done on them.
2. Sideboards took a prominent place in furnishings. Tops were attached.
3. Centre tables came into vogue; they were generally of the pedestal type.
4. Chairs were light and graceful.
5. Four poster beds (without canopies) were still made; they were both high and low. The posts were heavy and highly carved. Pineapple finials. Higher footboards sounded a new note. "Sleigh" beds came into fashion and from them our present style of beds developed.
6. The modern style of bureaus was first made at this time; that is, for the first time mirrors were attached to what had been a chest of drawers. Supporting posts were placed at the sides. This style is often called Colonial but that is a mistaken impression.

A characteristic Empire piece. Note the heavy, florid effect and compare with the Duncan Phyfe sofa on the reverse side of the next page. Characteristic Empire decorations; cornucopias, rosettes, and lion's paw feet. Empire sofas always have rolled-over arms, as here.

Note the importance of the mirror being attached. The Empire style was the first to do this and thus originated our modern bureau. Brass-tipped feet.

Figure 3. DRESSING STAND MIRROR

Notice carefully the arrangement here. The mirror is swung between posts in the same way as on the modern dressing table. These separate standing mirrors have been revived within the last few years by modern designers.

Rather a primitive piece but it shows the prevailing characteristics. Note the curved front legs and the heavy cornice.

Characteristic pillared style. Notice that the pillars are ornately carved (very similar to the carved posts of the beds of the time). Pressed glass knobs. Empire sideboards were massive affairs and had shaped back rails fastened to the piece. Later these evolved into the elaborate mirrored atrocities that surmounted the sideboards of the golden oak period.

Figure 10. FOUR-POSTER BEDSTEAD

By this time the canopies and testers were abandoned. The posts were retained for ornamental effect. Both high and low post beds were used. This is the low-post type. Note the pineapple finials.

Duncan Phyfe

New York

DUNCAN PHYFE was born in Scotland and came to this country in 1783, while still a boy. Eventually he established a furniture making establishment in New York City and became very successful, being rated a wealthy man.

He seems to have been the only American to develop a characteristic style of his own. He was an excellent cabinetmaker and an artist in line and proportion and the use of ornament.

STYLE

Phyfe's style was based on different influences.

- (a) Inspiration of Sheraton and Hepplewhite.
- (b) French Empire influence.
- (c) Followed full American Empire vogue.

It was a style based on the delicacy and finesse of Sheraton, Hepplewhite, and Adam, modified by French Empire.

An elegant style. His was the "furniture of polite society." Slender forms and an effect of lowness. Excellent proportion and highly developed feeling for line.

DETAILS

Lines; fine and graceful lines. Combination of straight and curved lines, especially the concave curve. Phyfe was a "master of the curve."

Proportions; gave the effect of slenderness and lowness.

General effect; elegant and very livable.

Structure; splendid; Phyfe was a master cabinetmaker.

Legs; of chairs and sofas; (a) Straight and fluted after the Sheraton style or late Louis XVI.

(b) Concave curve. (See cuts.) Often with acanthus leaf carving.

Legs of tables; (a) Tables supported at the corners on straight reeded legs. (Sheraton style.)

(b) Tables supported at ends by coupled colonnettes or lyres. (See cut 7.)

(c) Tables supported on pedestals. (See cut 8.)

Feet; generally paw or claw feet, often of brass (very characteristic of Phyfe). Straight reeded legs, of course, had only simple turned feet.

Arms; typical American Empire, starting near top of back uprights and ending in a scroll. (See cut 5.) Vase-shaped supports after Sheraton style.

Backs; characteristic Empire and late Sheraton with low scrolled back effect.

1. Lyre motif. (Very typical of Phyfe style. (See cut 4.) Note very particularly here the way the uprights of the back slope down onto the seat. This is very characteristic of American Empire and was a detail much used all over America.

2. Shaped horizontal bar between uprights of back. (See cut 5.)

3. X-shaped pieces, eight straight or curved. (See cut 5.)

Seats;

1. Generally rounded in front and on the sides.

2. Some styles square and tapering.

Underbracing; seldom used at all; never on chairs. Some of the tables with lyre or columned supports at each end would be connected with stretchers.

Ornament;

1. Carving the most important. Phyfe had rare taste and skill in carving.
2. Reeding and turning. Reeding very characteristic of the style.
3. Veneering.
4. Brass mounts and feet. Phyfe used these a great deal.

Motifs;

1. Classical. The openwork lyre is most characteristic of Phyfe and was used constantly by him in chair backs and for table supports. Other classical motifs were drapery swags, crossed thunderbolts with bow knot, cornucopias crossed with bow knot, trumpet, rope edgings, oval or rectangular medallions, rosettes.
2. Foliage motifs; the acanthus leaf is very distinctive of the Phyfe style and is seen constantly. Used particularly along the top of the concave legs. Also used the palm, oak, and laurel. Branch of crossed laurel. Bundle of wheat ears, crossed and tied with a bow knot.
3. Animal and bird motifs; Lion foot. Eagle wing.

MODERN USE

The Duncan Phyfe style of furniture has been revived within the last few years and the country at large is just beginning to know what this charming style is like. It is exceedingly well-suited for that type of house which has elegant simplicity for its keynote. Davenport tables, console tables, sewing cabinets, sofas and chairs, dining room sets; all are to be found now in furniture stores.

The Origin of Spool Turned Furniture

1810-1860

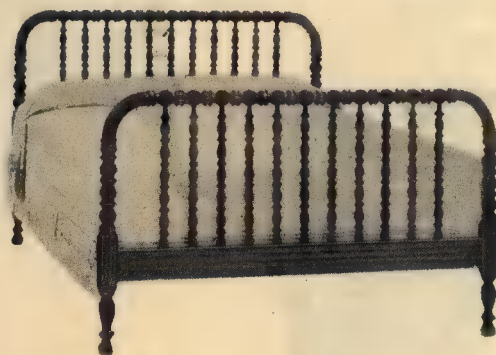

United States

SPOOL turnings, so-called, are not peculiar to any set style, nor do they form a part or actual "motif" of any of the recognized periods in the history of furniture.

Anyone who has taken a chisel in his hand and attempted to turn a piece of square stock into a lathe soon recognizes the fact that spool turning is about the easiest thing he can make. It is primitive. It is quite obvious therefore, that the earlier craftsmen elected to use this spool, or ball turning by reason of its simplicity. Quite a goodly number of antique models may be found in England, made no doubt, about the middle of the seventeenth century.

Turnings were perfectly plain at first and were made by wheelwrights (who were responsible for the earlier forms of Windsor chairs). The work was done on what was called a "fiddle lathe." Later on cabinet makers developed the idea of the spool or ball turning and used it on small stools and tables; it was the forerunner of the leg used on earlier types of really well designed gate leg tables.

Spool-turned furniture became popular in the United States in the Jeffersonian era (about 1810). The best examples of spool turning may be found in Kentucky and other states south of the Mason-Dixon line. Almost any old southern family boasts of at least one or two spool beds handed down from this era; usually of old walnut rarely colored. And it was from these vastly superior models that northern manufacturers derived their inspiration.

During the period immediately preceding the Civil War, or to be more exact about 1850-1860, water power began to be used by makers of furniture, and machinery came into more general use. It is interesting to note that one of the first machines to be invented was one known as the "back knife lathe"—forerunner of the "automatic" lathe of the present day. With this machine manufacturers were able to produce spool bedsteads at practically no cost at all save the inexpensive lumber then available, and in no time at all spool bedsteads flooded the entire United States. So completely did this article of furniture overrun demand that it is doubtful if they were manufactured to any appreciable extent after the close of the Civil war.

Of late years the fashion of spool beds has been revived; they are attractive and inexpensive and their popularity has grown into a real demand.

Figure 1. DUNCAN PHYFE SOFA

Compare this sofa with the full Empire sofa on the preceding page. While the general lines are the same, Phyfe has obtained grace and refinement where the other had clumsiness and ugliness. Characteristic Phyfe ornament; fluting along the seat rail and legs; lyre shapes in the arms. The lines are classic—the rolled-over top and the curved out legs. Another type of Phyfe sofa was almost entirely Sheraton in line and detail; straight, grooved legs. See Sheraton cuts.

Phyfe used one or two bars across the back in this type of chair; they were decorated in various ways.

Figure 4. LYRE BACK CHAIR

Phyfe's typical chair. The lyre was his favorite motif. Note carefully the way the back supports curve down onto the seat of the chair. Characteristic legs with the outward curve.

X shaped motif in the back; Phyfe used it both curved and straight. This chair shows the Sheraton influence very strongly; note the vase-shaped arm supports. Front feet of brass in paw shape.

NOTE—When three colors are used to obtain a contrast, a more pleasing effect will result if two of these are blends and a third is a contrast than if three contrasting colors are combined. Any three blends, however, may be used together. In these harmonies the best effects are obtained if one color predominates, the second color is less prominent and the third color is subordinate to the other two.

Color for Furniture Salesmen

WHEN a customer asks your advice on questions of color are you "up against it?"

Say she has an expensive oriental rug, a Khiva in deep maroon, and wants to build up a harmonious living room scheme around it. What colors would you suggest for upholstery, draperies and wall coverings?

First, determine whether she prefers a harmony of (1) Related Colors or one of (2) Contrasting—different—Colors.

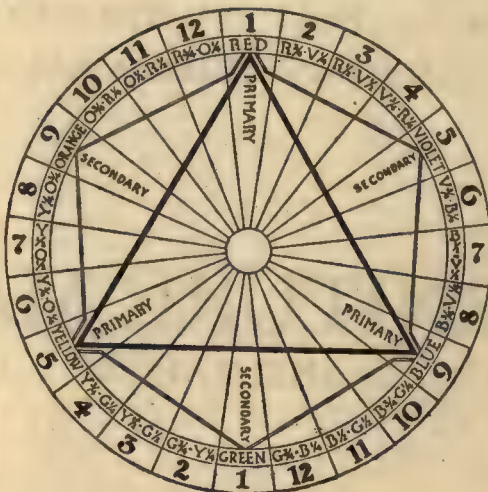

In the first instance the maroon of the rug will harmonize with other colors in which red is also a dominating note. Referring to the chart above we find these to be dark brown, brown, purple, heliotrope, red and pink.

Equally pleasing schemes may be developed from contrasting colors, colors in no way related.

The science of color contrast is in general quite simple, the trouble is so many colors are known by names that give no suggestion as to what they are. This science is derived from nature, not alone from the leaves and flowers of plants, which never clash, but from the rainbow, the refraction through raindrops of the sun's rays. In the rainbow we have six colors, Red, Orange, Yellow, Green, Blue and Violet. Red, Yellow and Blue are pure, or primary colors. The overlapping of the Red and Yellow refracted rays form the orange of the rainbow; of the Yellow and Blue, the Green; and of the Blue and Red, the Violet.

(NOTE—Blue and Red are about equal in Violet, in Purple the Red predominates.) Orange, Green and Violet are therefore secondary colors.

In contrasting harmony a color goes best with its opposite, which, remember, also intensifies it. Thus Green, the mixture of the primaries Yellow and Blue, is the opposite of Red, the third primary, etc., as shown on the wheel herewith (No. 1 across to No. 12). Note, also, that as the green inclines to blue the red must incline to orange. (No. 12 across to No. 12), etc.

When it comes to the use of colors in a room, a dominating contrast of red and green is suggested, but the contributing factors may include other colors that are related to red, including some yellow and some blue, because blue and yellow make green. Thus, when we refer again to our table, we find the colors that form a good contrast with maroon to be Tan, Cream, Yellow, Olive, Green, Light Green and Navy Blue.

It should be kept in mind that raw, strong colors are not so pleasing as those that are softened, i. e., toned down with black and white. Brilliant colors, lavishly used, are not in good taste; they should be reserved for small spots in the scheme. Again, black and white, not being colors at all—and gold—may be used in all combinations whether of related or contrasting harmony.

An Outline of its First Principles

By MARIAN MOORE

THAT a person's environment and surroundings have a direct influence on his life is an idea that is becoming universally recognized and for that reason the furnishing of a house has become an important part of the building of the house itself. A comfortable, cheery room naturally tends to make the occupants of the room comfortable and cheery also, whereas one that is stiff and gloomy has the opposite effect exactly. It has been said that a cheerless and dark dining room ruins more digestions than rich food ever did. So when a person's mental state is so closely correlated with the things that surround him it is of immense importance that he be surrounded with only what tends toward his comfort and his pleasure, and not toward his uneasiness.

It is unfortunate but true that the knowledge of furnishing the home is not instinctive. Therefore the study of the fundamentals of home decoration is a tremendously important one. Unfortunately, also, there are no set and fast rules that may be put forth that will serve every purpose, for each home is a problem in itself. By careful thought and understanding of the principles of tastefully furnishing a home, however, one is able to use his knowledge to fit each individual case. There is no short cut to this information but it is more often the result of real study with the expenditure of much time and effort.

Contrary to popular opinion the ability to decorate a home with artistry and comfort is not the property of the genius alone. Every man and woman is a potential decorator; and when a sense of what is becoming and appropriate, a fine perception of the harmonious and beautiful in form and color relationships, and a familiarity with decorative materials and processes, has been acquired, a person has the "taste" that is necessary for this decoration. By taste we mean a blending of knowledge, appreciation, and discrimination. Without this taste, the decorator can do nothing. With it he is enabled to discern beauty, order, proportion, symmetry, and whatever else is included in excellence. It is evident, then, that this taste can be acquired by the study of these things and that decorating the home in the best manner is never a matter of chance or even inspiration alone.

Interior decoration, although certainly one of the fine arts, differs from the others in that it requires skill in selection and placing rather than dexterity of hand or a high order of craftsmanship. This skill comes from a thorough understanding which is within the possibilities of everyone. Naturally it comes more readily to some than to others, but that is true of every study.

There are two classes to whom this study should particularly apply. First, those who use their own ideas, based on nothing more than personal preferences, and who do not know or recognize any authority but their own in matters of artistic judgment. Secondly, there are the others who recognize this authority and do not recognize the individuality that should enter into the art of decorating. They take a cut and dried pattern from a magazine or book, or even gleaned from the home of an acquaintance, and follow that by letter. Real interior decorating does not aim at either of these things—the flaunting of self-expression or the method of rank imitation. Like all other creative art it is founded on certain definable principles which must be adhered to. Even in the very individual art of painting De Vinci wrote long ago that those who practice art without having previously applied themselves to the diligent study of the scientific part of it may be compared to mariners who put out to sea without a rudder or compass and therefore cannot be certain of arriving at the wished for port. Practice must be founded on good theory. This holds true for interior decoration as for painting.

Within the last forty years the people of America have begun to take a new interest in the furnishing of their homes. They have begun to realize that the occupants of the home are influenced by the exterior factors—plants are influenced by the soil in which they grow and the sun, rain and air which they receive. The striving of America towards making living more beautiful and more sane is manifested as much in this added interest in the beauty of the home as in anything else. The intelligent housewife at the present time does not think she has done her best if her house is merely clean, but she wants to make it lovely and livable at the same time. While a great many homes do fall short of the goal even now, it is more through ignorance and lack of skill than through lack of interest and the desire to make it so. In order to create the Home Ideal one must not only want it but know how to go about creating it.

FITNESS TO PURPOSE

Three factors must be taken into consideration when a house is furnished: the personal (the fitness of the furniture to the individuals who occupy the home, their tastes, their needs, their age, sex and temperament, and the money to be spent); the architectural (the suitability of the furniture to the house itself, in scale, coloring and style); and the esthetic (the intrinsic beauty in the pieces selected and their harmony with each other). There can be no success along the line of decoration unless these factors are carefully considered and each given its proper attention.

The decorator is first confronted with the wide field of available furniture. From this he must first choose the things which are in themselves beautiful, and next select from this group those articles which suit the particular needs of the people in question. This limits the field even more and from the remainder are selected the things which are fitting to the architectural requirements of the certain building or room. The decorator then may choose from the things which remain in the group after this process of elimination has taken place, and it is only study and knowledge of what will come within this group that enables him to make the selection.

It does not necessarily take a great sum of money to furnish a home in the best of taste. There are too many really beautiful homes that have been done with comparatively small expense that prove this, and it is the taste to recognize the fitness and beauty of an article, and time and patience to hunt the correct things and the power to combine these things into a harmonious whole. These are the important things.

In the decoration of a certain home the size, shape and other architectural features are the first things to be taken in to consideration, although the personality of the people who are to occupy the home is of primary importance. A home is not, like a club or hotel, a temporary resting place which must be suitable to everyone but rather a place that is to be lived in by certain people and should be furnished according to their tastes and needs. It must express the individuality of the family group and no decoration can be adequate unless this is done. This is a self-evident fact but it is one that is overlooked by a great many professional decorators and laymen as well.

The professional rarely has a chance to study the life and likes and tastes of his clients with sufficient thoroughness to put their individuality into the rooms and the housewife who is doing it for herself often forgets that the room is in reality a background for the people who live in it, or she is overly anxious to follow what is conceded to be the fashion.

This instinct to follow—the desire to be in fashion—causes some to use those things which seem fashionable rather than those which are best fitted to the rooms they are decorating. Making the furniture fit the house is a close second to making it fit the people who are in the house.

The first thing to do is to study the house as a whole, its general plan and its style. Next, to take up the rooms one by one, considering the size, the shape, the woodwork and floors, the number, shape and locations of the doors and windows, its relationship to the connecting rooms, the outside view, and the morning and afternoon sun. All these things must be noted before one can best choose and place the furnishings of the room. Good decoration is primarily a matter of correct relationships, and only the house that meets the real needs, practical and esthetic, of the occupants can be said to be properly furnished. Whatever is used, an idea, a material, an object, must fit its purpose in a given situation or it is bad.

Fitness to purpose, then, is at the bottom of interior decoration and can not be overlooked in the study more than the fundamental theorems can be overlooked in the study of geometry.

Before any real decoration can be done the decorator must have a definite object—he must know what he is trying to do. No one can believe that, like Topsy, a restful and cheerful room will "just grow." Neither will this effect be produced by magic or a vague idea of beauty. It is a result of studied creative processes which are in themselves easily understood but which can be employed only by people who know what they are striving for.

Each room must have a purpose and not merely a name. A breakfast room that is not sunny or a library in a home where no one is fond of reading is worse than a contradiction of terms. It is a waste of time, money and valuable space. First the needs of the family must be noted and then each room have a function clearly defined to it. After this function has been decided upon everything that goes into the room should be chosen and arranged in order to best bring out that purpose, which must be kept ever in mind. In this way nothing should be placed in the bedroom which detracts from sleep and rest; nothing in the hall—which has dignity and formality and acts as an entrance to the other rooms—which admits one into the intimacies of family life; nor in the living room anything which makes one uncomfortable with too much austerity. If this is forgotten the room will be a failure, not only from an artistic standpoint but from a useful one as well.

As we said before, a home does not have to be elaborately furnished to be tastefully done. It all varies with the style of the house, the means and preferences of the occupants; but there is one thing that seems often overlooked by the layman and that is that the whole house should be furnished on a carefully graduated scale. The inexpensive mixed with the fine shows a lack of discrimination and the cheapness is emphasized while the fine is itself spoiled. One room should not be furnished in a manner so much more elegant than the other rooms that it will cause notice, neither should single costly articles, which are obviously above the other things in the room be used. Thus it is absolutely necessary for the decorator to have in mind a definite plan of procedure and spend much time on planning so that each room will fit its purpose, and on budgeting so that the house may be viewed and taken as a whole and not merely a group of separate rooms. This plan should include a color scheme of each room and a list of the important articles required for each one, according to the size of the room and the needs of those who are to occupy it. Then should be prepared a careful list of prices for these different things and, if the aggregate cost is higher than the amount allowed, then the whole scheme should be changed and not a mere substitution of a few cheaper pieces or the withdrawal of some articles which were deemed necessary in the first place.

This fitness to purpose is almost as much a matter of what is to be left out as it is to what is to be put in. Therefore the word "simplicity" is used a great deal in speaking of decoration. By this is meant a freedom from complexity, from too many parts and from an artificial style. It does not mean mere bareness with no ornament whatsoever. No one claims that there is anything intrinsically beautiful in calcimined walls or oatmeal paper or mission furniture but with the proper surroundings their plainness seems to fit in. A room may be furnished elegantly and yet simply when everything in the room is necessary and not one could be omitted without marring the beauty and utility of it.

One great fault that the American housewife has that keeps our homes from having this much sought after simplicity is the love of accumulating things and the hatred in throwing them away. There are too many small objects that seem to be merely "sticking around." Even when a small article is lovely in itself, if there are too many of these articles in evidence, no one of them gets its proper effect. The Japanese have a better custom—that of displaying a few beautiful things at a time so that all are not made common by an effusion of them. William Morris has said to have only those things in your house which you know to be beautiful and useful. That is an invaluable admonition but extremely difficult to live up to. Instinctively we hate to give up what we have and it is only by learning to value what we gain by simplicity that we will freely discard those things we are used to, even though we are convinced that they are neither lovely nor useful. It is a dear price to pay but everything worth while has its price and the effect gained in this case is worth it.

Just as in literature ideas are expressed by words, in decoration they are expressed by form and color. Form in itself has an emotional significance in almost as great a degree as color has, although the latter is more universally recognized. These emotional meanings are the language of decoration and naturally the language must be mastered before one can successfully compose. The meaning of each individual factor must then be learned. Form and color are essentially different as form appeals to the intellect and color to the emotion. Form is masculine, solid, hard and active, while color is feminine, fluid, soft and passive. The interest of the decorator then is not with each one but rather with their relations to one another and their use in composition.

LINE AND FORM

Because man understands and appreciates only those things that he himself has experienced he interprets all lines in their relation to the human form. When man is stern and resistant he stands straight and stiff, therefore straight lines mean to man austerly and dignity. When he is relaxed his body falls in natural curves and when he is carrying a load his body bends, making more pronounced arches and curves which become more pronounced with the weight of the load. These same lines then found in other things have the same meaning to man, and he has come to associate horizontal lines with repose (for man sleeps in a horizontal attitude), and vertical lines with activity and action. It has been pointed out that the difference between straight and curved lines is that curved lines suggest the instinctive, the natural, while all straight lines are directly the products of man and not of nature, and therefore they suggest dignity, thought and a definite purpose. Straight lines then are used for the structural elements of a house, or a room, and are brought out in the main design of furniture, rugs and hangings, in the same degree that the room itself is serious and dignified.

On the other hand curves suggest flexibility and grace and make the things employing these curves impart that attitude. When used exclusively they give the effect of instability and weakness, when the lines are short and broken mutability is suggested, and when interwoven and crossed the complex and the obscure. Undulating curves suggest movement, while those that are upturning give the effect of gaiety and animation, particularly when they are repeated. This is no doubt suggested by the upward curve of the mouth in a smile. Wallpaper and hangings emphasizing these curves are used in rooms that need brightening. The proper use of these curves takes away the stiffness and severity caused by the use of many straight lines and gives to the room softness and grace. However a straight line is always to be preferred to a meaningless and weak curve which cannot be defined absolutely but can be recognized only by an eye trained by observation and comparison. The first thing to understand is the weight bearing elements of the different curves, and when certain curves are suitable and when they are not. In a horizontal curve, one which is supported and does not support, as in a lamp or a festoon, almost any curve meets with approval as any one seems reasonable. In a vertical curve the mind naturally expects the means of support to be adjusted to the load and recognizes there is something amiss when this is not so. As a man bends his body slightly when the load he carries is light, so the legs of a light table should be graceful with a slight curvature. An exaggerated and deep curve immediately seems out of proportion with the weight of the table top. On the other hand a heavy table, such as the ones used during the Italian and French Renaissance requires the deeply curved brackets revealing the same curves as the human form would have when supporting a heavy load. Neither then is a curve a matter of personal taste and chance more than any other part of decoration.

Broken lines suggest life and animation and for that reason it is the function of the smaller articles, such as pillows on a davenport, a fire screen, the outline of books with the book ends, to give this atmosphere to a room. The heavier pieces must of necessity be more solemn and subdued to carry out the restfulness that is needed in every room. The broken line is effective if used sparingly but if overemphasized the result is chaos and perplexity. One must be careful to shun any arrangement of broken lines that gives the impression of arithmetical progression, such as the stair-step arrangement of pictures which leads the eye up to a certain spot on the wall and there the attention is left suspended, destroying the symmetry of the wall. In some houses the windows are built on a slightly different level and whenever possible this irregular line must be overcome by the use of a valance, hung so the windows have the appearance of being on a level.

As shown by the faces above, from an old drawing of Humbert de Superville, broken lines may suggest gaiety or gravity, in accordance to the V which they form, whether it be upright or inverted.

Horizontal lines suggest calmness and repose, while vertical ones give the idea of activity and support. When vertical lines are long and straight they seem firm and sometimes stern and stiff. Thus a low broad chair suggests the idea of comfort and repose while this is repulsed by one with a tall straight back. Diagonal lines have the suggestion of movement, which is tiresome and nerve-racking when used to excess. Thus the majority of wallpapers which are the repetition of the same design repeated at regular intervals and forming disquieting diagonals cause the room to seem always on the jump. All over patterns should as a rule be avoided in anything that has a flat smooth surface, while they are not objectional in draperies whose folds cause the diagonal to be broken up.

Shapes like lines have their emotional significance which are a compound of the lines and the proportions. Thus the square gives the idea of solidity and strength but because of the obvious lines it proves monotonous and rooms that are square are relatively uninteresting, as are square wall spaces, windows, fireplace and pieces of furniture. The oblong is used more than any other shape because its unequal dimensions obviate, to a certain extent, the monotony of the straight lines. The triangle is more subtle, combining the straight with the diagonal, and is used as a motive itself and in arrangement.

Curved forms are a rule more agreeable than those composed of straight lines. The circle with its idea of completeness and finality is monotonous in itself but when used as a basis for a repeating pattern is excellent. The ellipse and the oval have the relation to the circle that the oblong has to the square, being more agreeable to the eye and having greater emotional significance.

COLOR

Color has perhaps a more direct and greater emotional effect upon people than any other element of decoration. Those of every age and nationality are affected by it and the racial characteristics may be partially determined by the colors which a certain people love. Colors have the power to elevate, to cheer, or to depress one, so the study of color and color schemes is an important one in the furnishing of a home.

Color means to the scientist the colored lights found in the spectrum. To the artist it means certain pigments, and the decorator, as the artist of the home, uses the latter meaning. The artist uses these colors to reproduce nature (except those of the so called "new school") while the decorator is concerned only with the effects produced. He has a larger area to cover than the artist; he employs fewer colors, which are often more or less massive. The painter may, because he is following nature, use inharmonious colors; the decorator, never. The work of the decorator then is not to create something which is merely beautiful but which will serve as a background for people who will live in a room and be beautiful well.

There are three primary hues which can not be formed by the mixture of other hues and which may be blended with black and white to form all other colors. These are red, yellow and blue. The colors which may be formed by mixing pigments of the hues are infinite and each one may be in itself a pure color. By pure color we mean a color that comes nearest to being the color as seen in the solar spectrum—that is nearest to the color which we regard as normal. Because these pure colors have great intensity they can be used only for small areas; for the larger ones the color must be changed and softened by the addition of black, white, or gray, or the use of complementary colors. Each color then may be increased in dullness by the continued use of black and, in the same way, be made lighter by the addition of white. Any two hues which added together form a neutral grey are complementary colors but these must be mixed in a certain proportion and the process of neutralization in this way results in a great variety of colors.

The effects upon our emotions and the significance of the different colors are readily seen and understood. Some colors convey the feeling of warmth, the others of coldness. The warm colors are those in which the red or yellow predominates while cold ones have the greater amount of blue. This is easy to understand because red is the color of fire and blood, yellow the color of light and directly associated with life itself, while blue is the color of cool still water and tranquil skies and even of ice. When these colors then are used in decorating the home they have these effects. Some colorists have said that no decoration is complete unless all three primaries are utilized, because in themselves they symbolize life—the buoyancy of morning, the passion and heat of noon, and the calm of night. Violets and greens have a quality to be found in both sets of primaries, varying with the color which predominates. Black used alone suggests darkness and gloom while white radiates coldness and purity, but when used for contrast have a striking effect.

Light tones are comparable with curved lines, suggesting action, while the darker ones like straight lines are more dignified. The high values, those having a great quantity of the primary color, show gaiety, activity, lightness and strength while those of low value have the effect of permanence and repose.

TEXTURE

Flat color is never beautiful and as Ruskin said, no matter how small a touch of color may be if one part of it is not darker than the other it is a bad touch. It is of course impossible to gain this variation in the distribution of the pigment itself and it is in this way that texture comes into its importance. Oftentimes a color is not intrinsically lovely but when that color is found in an interesting surface as in oak or walnut or some beautiful fabric it, too, is endowed with beauty. Black and white are relieved by texture of the object; red, yellow and blue are tempered.

The texture of background surface is a matter of great importance and walls and ceilings should never be calcimined unless the surface is rough. This roughness may be obtained by covering the walls first with muslin or canvas and then stippling them. Rough papers like grass cloths and flocks are excellent in the more expensive papers, while imitation grass cloth and jaspes put to good use dots and hairlines of color upon an embossed surface.

Textures, too, may be grouped according to emotional reactions and be placed with other textures. Oak seems to be associated with strength and vigor and is related to low tones and simple shapes, while satinwood seems to complement damasks and brocades and lighter, more graceful shapes. Consistent use of texture is important in a greater degree than in ornament or style. They cannot, however, be grouped with reference to their cost, as an expensive basket weave would suit to perfection a living room furnished in good willow, while a damask costing a great deal less would be entirely too formal. Textures must be grouped according to their significance which usually depends upon their physical characteristics and association of ideas. As a general rule glossy textures are grouped with glossy ones and dull textures with dull. An exception may be made with the use of highly colored fabrics, however. The use of texture is not to allow the decorator to express new ideas but rather to carry out those which he has started with form and color, and to emphasize these effects, for the greatest skill is in the combining of all the different elements of decoration so that each will add an important something towards the perfect whole.

ELEMENTS OF BEAUTY

After the decorator has mastered the mechanics of decoration and learned that everything in art is full of meaning and after he has learned that meaning, he is ready to take up the study of arrangement and what constitutes beauty itself. He can easily insure fitness and comfort by proper care and common sense but the difficult question is how to make the room beautiful when beauty, such an intangible quality, is itself undefinable and of no fixed standards. It is something we can experience but cannot explain. This is not as impossible to study as it sounds, however, for the elements of beauty or rather the conditions under which it occurs are fairly constant. Therefore, if the conditions of beauty are present in a given situation it is a self-evident fact that beauty will be present too. The first condition, which is the most easily understood, is that the room should be furnished with unity in variety. That means that before any piece of art is complete it must consist of many parts, which must be combined so that they form a perfect whole, or one as nearly perfect as possible. No room can be beautiful unless there is present a diversity of lines, shapes, colors and textures played upon by different lights and shadows, and with this diversity every thing must be fused into a unified object, which shows itself to the mind to have a single purpose and design. On the other hand no room furnished according to these ideas, showing a stimulating degree of diversity combined with unity, can fall short of having a certain amount of beauty.

The arrangement of like with like is one of the first admonitions that the decorator must follow. The human mind is built so that it can receive only a certain amount of impressions at the same time and it naturally groups the objects that it views. Thus when the mind can readily perceive certain likenesses between unlike objects, it is pleased and consequently sees something of beauty in the arrangement. A furnished room does, of course, contain a greater variety of tones, shapes, and textures and if the mind can immediately see resemblances between many forms in the room, it is instantly aware of beauty. If a likeness of hue and tone is also present among the colors of the room, this feeling of beauty is intensified. And when everything in the room leads toward the emotional significance the shapes, hues, and textures have all been selected with the same ideas in mind, the observer is more keenly aware of the beauty in the room.

In placing like with like the elements may resemble in looks or merely in emotional significance. They may show a great deal of likeness for one another or the resemblance be very slight. They may be only partially alike but in whatever degree the likeness is employed, the resemblance must be clear and not have to be searched for, because an effort in connection with beauty is a contradiction of terms. It is not sufficient that things be grouped according to their likenesses but there must be in every composition a dominant element, to which the other parts are subordinated. One color must be played upon more than others, while one type of line must stand out as the main one in the room. First, then, we have the method of repetition by putting like with like, and next the method of principality, with one element in the highest degree of importance.

The decorator must first decide on what emotional idea should dominate and build his treatment around that idea, and next he should decide on the dominant hue. After that the next step is to arrange a single object or a group of closely related objects so that the attention of the person coming into the room will not be bewildered but may rest naturally upon this group, quickly recognizing its importance. Only in a hall or dining room where there is very little furniture may the rug be the dominant element for the mind expects the important part to be at the top, and in any room where there is a lot of furniture the mind is subjected to a severe strain, if the attention is drawn immediately to the floor. The architecture must of course determine what the dominant feature must be. Oftentimes it is the mantel and fireplace, or a group of windows with their draperies, or something that is equally important and is worthy of having the attention centered upon it, for if not the dominant element causes a feeling of distaste that will influence the entire room.

After the dominant element has been selected the decorator must avoid having it too conspicuous for while it should obtain the attention at first it should not protrude itself so that it becomes the only thing in the room that is noticed. For instance, the dominant element is to be the fireplace. In the average room, if the mantel is large and protruding, it should not have a massive picture over it or a great amount of decoration, but if the mantel is small, in order to make it dominate, it may be decorated in a way to add to its importance.

The dominant hue may be brought out in one of two ways. First, to make all the important hues in the room keyed to the same hue—that is, the dominant hue is used as a constituent in the other hues used. The second is to cover two-thirds of the decorative surface with different tones of the dominant hue. In either method the fairly neutral tones in the room which form the background may be keyed to the dominant hue, thus giving a unified effect to the whole.

Repetition is useful both because the perception of the same thing is more easily grasped by the mind than a variety of different objects and, too, because repetition is associated with succession and order and not with irregularity and disquietude. Thus the repetition of pleasing motifs in the walls or floor coverings affects the mind with a sense of order and unity. This may be brought about by the use of three different forms: first, the diaper pattern, the simplest and most common form, used in wall paper, damask, all-over carpets, covering the entire surface with the same pattern; second, in its most obvious form in which every piece of form and color is balanced with a like piece on the other side; third, in the most subtle form, as the repetition in many separated objects of identical or similar lines, shapes or color.

The repetition of color is as essential as the repetition of form and each important color must be recalled at least once in varying times through the room. The mind expects color likenesses and is dissatisfied if it finds only a jumble. While variety is important it must be remembered that it is to be used to relieve the monotony of unity and not to take the place of this unity. One thing that made the rooms of thirty years ago homely was the conglomeration of objects found in the room, without any attention paid to the unity of the room whatsoever. Just as bad were the old-fashioned parlor sets where every piece of furniture was of the same pattern and the same color and material. There is the happy medium and this is what we are striving for—a room that will be beautiful with restfulness gained by the unity of the whole and animation that comes through variety.

CONTRAST

It is not only necessary that there be a unity among the things in the room and that variety is also present but, in order to bring this variety out the law of contrast is employed. By this straight lines appear more straight when opposed to curves and two colors that are contrasted both appear more vivid. Everything that we experience is intensified by contrast, and it is through this contrast that we are able to discriminate between different emotional states. Contrast has its physical properties as well as emotional, and it is a well known fact that when a short chair and a tall one stand near one another the short one appears shorter and the tall one seems to have greater height. Also when one dimension in the room is emphasized the other dimensions naturally appear to be on a smaller scale. In decoration the importance lies not so much in the actual size of the object as in the apparent size and the decorator must take this change in appearance that articles will undergo when placed in conjunction with other articles into his consideration when planning the room and make allowances for these changes.

Colors, even more than shapes, are affected by contrast, and the complications in color arise only with their relations to other colors. A light object on a dark background makes the first appear lighter than it would ordinarily and the latter darker. This is true of colors in different hues. A light red pillow on a dark blue sofa makes the red lighter and the blue darker, but there is still another effect. A tinge of orange appears on the edge of the cushion and a greenish line around the sofa at the point of contact. There is not a great deal of danger of this, still there is the possibility and care should be taken so that the phenomenon will not occur. This may be done by cutting squares of cardboard and placing them on the background color. A contrast of tone of the same hues is a necessity also—the contrast between the floor and the wall, then between the wall and the ceiling. These contrasts must be, and yet if they are too marked the effect is bad and arouses a feeling of activity. The worst form of contrast is, however, the contrast of small masses, such as a motif in a carpet which stands out and calls attention to itself, or a mahogany piano against putty colored walls, or a very dark tapestry against an ivory wall. If the walls and ceiling are of a darker shade than the floor it gives a topheavy atmosphere to the room so the darker colors should be near the bottom, and because the lighter colors have an air of buoyancy they should be placed in the upper half of the room. A light rug on a dark floor is bad and the converse. Contrast is essential but it must be reduced, not to a minimum, but to that point where patchiness and spottiness are nowhere in evidence.

While it is impossible to formulate fast rules in the law of contrast as in other parts of decoration, there are a few things to be followed and remembered. Contrast is in the main effort to relieve the mind of too much monotony but when these contrasts become too sharp, or in themselves predominate so that the unity of the whole is destroyed, or even attacked, there is too much contrast. These contrasting elements must be placed so that there is always kept the sense of balance and too many contrasts will spoil the charm and tranquility of any room.

PROPORTION

As we have said several times man instinctively looks toward the human form and natural phenomena for his ideas and his standards about the things that he himself builds. He looks for things grouped together as they might have grown, and as the tree, immovable, has a support that tapers from bottom to top, so objects not easily moved about the house, as heavy tables and davenport, rightly to have that kind of leg while light things that may be readily moved from place to place call for a leg that tapers from the top to the bottom, because all animals are built that way. The Greeks tried to formulate laws of proportion by studying the body and its proportions and making a certain definite ratio that might be used with any building if one definite proportion had been decided upon. This cannot be done without fail but the thing to be remembered is the placing of like with like and the element of fitness. We cannot put massive furniture in a small room, or one that is to be dainty and gay. All parts of the room, color, lines, shapes and size, must be in accord.

The decorator must at all times be governed by the architectural structure of the room and then he must make up his idea what effect he will produce. He can cause a room that is structurally low to gain height by the use of tall furniture and straight drapes and seemingly change the real aspect of the room by what he puts in it. Take for instance a room to be furnished into a tranquil, restful living room. The first emphasis must be placed upon the unity and not upon the variety of the room, upon low tones rather than brilliant ones, upon horizontal rather than vertical extension. If the room is low with broad fireplace and windows, there is, of course, difficulty, but in case the ceiling is high the walls should be dark as the lighting of the room will allow, the narrow opening in the room made lower by the use of a valance and drape that extend beyond the window as the door proper. These drapes should be caught back as the long straight lines add to the apparent height. The furniture must, too, be low and broad, vases, bowls and lampshades relatively wide and squat, and, if possible, the rug should cover most of the floor space. In a low ceilinged room the processes would be practically reversed. A long narrow room may be helped by the use of large mirrors on the side walls that give the appearance of greater width to the room.

The proportions of the room influence the choice of the decorative elements to a great extent. The scale of the furniture must be increased as the size of the room is increased. A large room looks better with a large rug than with several small ones for it must be remembered in the use of small rugs it is the floor that serves as a background and not the rugs. A rug should be placed with its axis in accordance to the axis of the room and never obliquely on the floor—that is as bad as hanging a picture in that fashion. The same thing is true to the placement of the larger pieces of furniture—a piano, a davenport, a bed, should always be placed parallel to the wall no matter how far from the wall it may be.

Actual and apparent size as by means the same thing for light structure and graceful lines reduce the apparent size of any piece of furniture. The character of the pieces must accord with the style of the room as well as the size, and in connection with this there is another point that is worthy of discussion—that of the idea that only bulky furniture is comfortable. Many housewives seem to think that all that is needed to complete the room is a group consisting of overstuffed davenport and two chairs to match. In a small living room this is impossible as it gives the room an everlasting appearance of being crowded and no decoration could overcome it. A piece of furniture may be just as graceful as desired and still lose nothing of comfort.

BALANCE

Balance comes the nearest to being mechanical of anything discussed in connection with decorations. A stick may be balanced by equal weights hung at different spaces from the center, or it may be balanced by unequal weights hung at different spaces from the point of balance with the smaller weight hung nearer the center. Balance in decoration is very like this. Two objects like a pair of candlesticks placed equi-distant from a center balance each other to perfection but the objects do not have to be identical to balance. Nor is the problem as simple as the mathematical one. Weight in decoration depends upon many things—color, size, shape, tone, texture, and contrast. The weight of any object is increased by anything that increases the interest in it, its distinctive color, or shape.

There are two kinds of balance, the first of which is produced by the arrangement of like or closely related objects from a real or imagined center at equal distances, and the other arranges two dissimilar elements at unequal distances from this center. The fixed decorations, the furniture and the small occasional pieces make up the elements of balance. The walls are the first things to be balanced and three of them balanced symmetrically is the ideal towards which to work. If a door is placed in the exact center of the wall or two openings at equal distances from a center the wall is in balance but if the opening is not in the center the wall must be balanced by other means. Width is more important in balance than height and a low bookcase would balance a window while a long narrow tapestry would not. In formal balance the most important object will naturally be placed in the center of the wall; in the occult it will be placed far enough from the center so that it is obvious that it is not intended to be the center. Sometimes a piano must be placed against the wall in the exact center because the wall is not large enough for an occult balance. In that case the other objects in the group are preferably of a very dissimilar nature and the balance be gained by lighter articles.

"Like with like" applies to pictures and monochromes should not be hung with oils, wood frames with gilt. If small pictures are to be placed on a large wall space they must be grouped so that they make together an object of sufficient importance to warrant their being hung there. No picture should stand out clearly from the rest as this will detract from them as a group. A picture of any decorative value is seldom hung by itself but usually over a table, cabinet or chair, which serves as a base and should consequently be wider than the picture. When two pictures are hung one above the other, however, the larger must be above as the lower one has the appearance of being suspended from it.

Although no one claims that two walls should be identical, a careful balance must be preserved or the room will appear lopsided. A drawing of the room with an inch or half inch to a foot scale is helpful for then the different pieces could be placed on the diagram of the room and balanced until the arrangement seems perfect and, too, the decorator has the advantage of viewing the room as a whole and not merely side at a time.

Color is balanced by quality rather than by quantity, as a small object of a brilliant hue may easily balance a larger mass in a duller one.

COLOR HARMONY

The decorator has already learned the emotional significance of the colors and how color plays an important role in the art of furnishing the home. So now, after selecting the dominant hue, he must decide upon certain hues that will look well together, distribute these hues so that the whole is pleasant and with such reference to their intensity that a balance is obtained between the pure color and the neutral color of the room. One way in which color harmony may be obtained is by use of color analogy—or the same hue recurring in different tones throughout the room. We can take, for instance, any warm color as our basis—say, yellow, which is alive, becoming to most people and may be used effectively in either cheap or costly materials and is suitable to practically any room. The hue may vary from ivory to a dark golden brown. Although the hue itself should be kept constant and vary the tone. It might have a rich golden brown carpet and hangings, golden brown walls, with an ivory ceiling, nut brown woodwork and ecru curtains. While this room as described has the qualities of repose it is too monotonous for beauty and uses the same optic nerves. The next step, then, is to add more color to the room, to change the hangings from brown to henna, burnt orange, or old gold, and some cushions, lamp shades, etc., of the same shade. If, however, red is unpleasant an olive brown may be substituted for the carpet and the yellow used instead of the red. Harmonies of analogy are quiet and restful and may be effected by the use of common sense and care, although it may be characterized by lack of snap.

The second kind of harmony is that of complementary colors in which the hue lying opposite the dominant hue in the chromatic circle is used for contrast. They are less subtle and restful but are more full of life than the analogous harmonies. Triad schemes using the three colors instead of two are effective but are more difficult as it is hard to find a harmonious combination of the three decided upon.

The wall color, as the background, is important and exercises a great effect on the rest of the room. In a room furnished quietly the walls may be of a greater intensity of color than a room furnished with bright rugs and rich paintings and porcelains, in which case the walls would fade to almost a neutral color. Large areas of plain colors are never attractive but they must be broken in a way that adds charm and attractiveness.

ORNAMENT

Ornament is primarily to enhance the beauty of an object by emphasizing its artistic lines or by adding something worthwhile to the object and never to hide the structural form with the adornment. When this is done the effect is bad and worse than no ornamentation at all. All ornamentation may be traced to a natural or geometric origin, the latter being the first one used by primitive people, simple arrangements of lines, scrolls, squares, triangles, etc. The naturalistic motifs come from human and plant life which may be copied exactly from life in detail and development or reproduced from the natural object in idea but changing the details and coloring—this is the conventional design, and makes it possible to combine the object of nature with the object it is to adorn. All this is essential in decoration.

The popular designing of the day is more concerned with symbolic forms than true pictures, in so far as they are intrinsically pleasing. A knowledge of symbolism gives the decorator more pleasure in doing his work and in viewing it, but successful practice does not require any historical knowledge of adornment although an acquaintance with the evolution of ornamental art should be a part of every cultured person's equipment.

The three great sins against ornamentation are committed by the use of adornment which is not in keeping with structure, the use of things that are incongruous, that could not have grown together, and the use of too much or too little decoration. The last sin is the hardest to discriminate against but we do know that ornament must be balanced with plain. Overemphasis upon the plain tends towards weak, uninteresting rooms, while too much adornment results in a confusion which is fatal to beauty.

As a final word, remember that good taste is essential and that it is mostly a matter of fitness. When the sense for this is acquired, as it may be by study, analysis and comparison, the decorator is ready to furnish the home with artistry, depending upon a real knowledge of what is beautiful and useful, and not upon dreams and enthusiasms.

Here's why Bassick Casters make repeat sales

ONCE a customer uses Bassick easy-rolling casters she will never use anything else. Bassick casters are built right—last long—and give a full measure of service. Make one sale and you'll make many more to the same customer. This is why:

Diamond Velvet Socket Type

- Operation: Extremely easy-rolling and swivelling because of top-bearing construction and fibre bearings — housework made easier. Quiet-rolling because of fibre bearings.
- Protection: Proper rollers prevent damage to floors and floor coverings and protect the joints of furniture from strain.
- Convenience: Casters stay put in the socket — they don't fall out.
- Sanitation: No exposed bearings to collect dirt or get rusty.
- Construction: Built on the top-bearing principle — direct load is carried at the top. Fibre bearings at top and at bottom where side strain is encountered. Added strength owing to "fulfit" pintle.

The Modern Furniture Caster

Moves Easily and Does not Damage Floors

THE efficient and economical arrangement of modern homes demands of furniture that it be easily movable. Hardly a day passes without the position of some piece of furniture being changed. A bed, an easy chair, a table, a davenport, always there is something to be moved. Good casters, that roll and turn easily, that do not fall out, being always ready to serve, offer the only satisfactory means of obtaining such mobility.

The advent of better furniture and better floors is further causing homeowners to demand that casters, in addition to rolling freely at all times, protect the floors and floor coverings over which they move. No casters, or faulty ones, on furniture mean scarred and marred floors, torn rugs, and wobbly furniture. Every owner of a polished hardwood floor has seen that floor marred by faulty casters or furniture without casters to such an extent that it could hardly be repaired by refinishing. Carpets and rugs are constantly being worn and torn by uncastered furniture or furniture equipped with poor or unsuitable casters. Furniture of all kinds is becoming rickety before its time because of the lack of proper casters. Every time pressure is exerted against a bed, table or chair in order to change its position, and that piece of furniture does not move promptly and easily, its every joining is put under a side strain which the furniture is not built to withstand.

To give satisfaction a caster must swivel and turn freely. Before a piece of furniture can be rolled across the floor, its casters must turn into lines parallel with the line of movement. Only then can the wheels function. Whether or not they do this depends upon the nature and efficiency of the friction reducing medium employed to aid the swiveling action.

PLAIN HORN GRIPNECK CASTERS

In the early styles of modern steel casters no attempt was made to improve the swiveling action by the use of special bearings, the entire load being carried on a shoulder at the base of the caster stem. This arrangement prevented proper swiveling under even the best of conditions, and the weight increased the efficiency of the caster decreased in proportion. Such construction is still found in the cheaper grades of casters.

These types of casters are held in the furniture by what is termed a gripneck socket. This socket is simply a steel tube open at both ends with the top end slotted and sprung in so as to grip under the head of the caster stem which is pushed up into it. The other end of the tube is fitted with a small round plate, called a track plate, having upright teeth all around its edge which are driven into the furniture leg, holding the socket firmly in its well.

BALL AND ROLLER BEARING CASTERS

Next came ball bearing and roller bearing casters. They reduce friction by transferring the weight of the furniture from the base of the caster stem to a circle of small steel balls or rollers, moving freely in a race at the top of the horn. However, dirt collecting in the ball race and the rusting of the bearings during periods of non-use very materially limit their efficient life. With its bearings clogged, the caster no longer turns freely when pressure is exerted against the furniture. Mobility is lost. Scratches, mars, strains, result. This difficulty is, of course, easily overcome if care is taken to oil the bearings occasionally. But this is asking quite a bit of the ordinary homeowners. They won't take time to oil casters. The logical result has been the development of casters designed to work consistently without oil.

SPECIAL PATENTED BEARING CASTERS

There are now being manufactured quite a number of patented bearing casters which are much superior to the gripneck casters. These casters are an improvement as they are so designed that the weight of the furniture is carried through the top of the stem of the caster which reduces the friction tremendously. These patented casters are manufactured in standard size sockets for wood and metal furniture.

CASTER WHEELS

After the caster is headed in the right direction, the responsibility for the furniture's mobility is shifted to the wheel. Once the casters are properly lined up, it is the wheel which determines whether the furniture moves easily or with difficulty, whether or not the floor is scratched and marred, and whether carpets and rugs are protected or torn. A wheel's efficiency depends upon the material of which it is made, its size in proportion to the load it carries, and the skill with which it is designed and built.

A large variety of materials has been used in making caster wheels, including wood, porcelain, iron, rubber, leather, steel, brass, fibre, wool and feltoid. Of this list, wood (maple and lignum-vitae), iron and steel have been used the most extensively.

Maple is a very unsatisfactory material as it wears rapidly and splits far too easily. High grade lignum-vitae makes a very good wheel for ordinary household use as it is sufficiently hard and long lived to wear, its high percentage of oil gives it a good natural finish which always looks well and it does not damage floors to the extent metal casters are apt to. The chief argument in favor of iron is its strength. However, steel wheels, properly made, are equally strong and look better.

For the absolute protection of hardwood floors, pure felt, feltoid or other composition wheels should be used. Good floors are expensive. Their beauty depends upon their being kept free from scratches and unsightly mars. Refinishing costs many times the price of a few sets of good casters equipped with proper wheels. Soft tread wheels insure the floors over which they roll. They are noiseless. The homeowner who appreciates his floors and is interested in their preservation and economical upkeep cannot afford to have anything else on his furniture.

PLATE CASTERS

In addition to these types of stem casters, there are two other styles in general use. One, commonly known as a plate caster, is used on chests, utility boxes and other pieces of furniture without legs. These are invariably either ball or roller bearing, the necessity of a flat plate for attaching to furniture eliminating the possibility of other bearings being used.

METAL BED CASTERS

The other common type is used on metal beds and equipment with tubular legs. There are several styles of these casters manufactured. They incorporate all the various bearing designs outlined above under stem casters. The important thing to remember about them is the absence of standard sizes that fit all beds. There is a different size spring or socket attachment for every size tubing. Thus, great care must be exercised to see that the casters fit properly into the bed posts on which they are to be used. The safest way of making sure of this when purchasing new casters is to send one of the old casters to the jobber or manufacturer to have the spring size duplicated. If this is impossible, cut a triangular wedge out of cardboard and use it as a gauge to determine the inside diameter of the tubing. Send this to the supplier plainly marked.

FINISHES

The great majority of casters used today are made of steel. Brass plated and nickel plated finishes are supplied by all manufacturers and are far more satisfactory than the so-called "bright" finish.

Furniture Hardware

Contributes to its Attractiveness

YOUR business, any business is service to Mrs. Retail Customer. As a rule she is a pretty fair sort of person and the chances are if we cultivate her acquaintance and show proper respect for her likes and dislikes we shall profit thereby.

It is needless to remind ourselves that we are in a full fledged buyers' market. The days of easy sales are past. In the new scheme of things we must put up a good fight in a keenly competitive game. Furniture must not only have solid value and wearing qualities but must also have attention compelling qualities. Competition is a leveler of prices and attractiveness by decoration and finish has become of great importance. A solid mahogany dresser is no more attractive on the retailer's floor than the same piece built of veneer except for its finish, its carvings and its hardware.

Modern brass knobs and handles on American modifications of ancient furniture do much to help make present day furniture beautiful. The fundamental lines of furniture will place it in one of the many great classifications, as for example, Italian, French, English and American. But the brasses invariably enhance its beauty as does the gem on my lady's hand.

Not all furniture trimmings, however are so endowed. There are many designs developed with furniture through the centuries while many other varieties have come into being without parentage. There are hundreds of patterns which may be used on present day American furniture lending attractiveness so important in making a good first impression and the closing of the sale to Mrs. Customer.

Progressive furniture manufacturers realize the importance of hardware and many of them trim their furniture with the best of brass hardware, selecting handles and knobs which agree in outline with the general characteristics of the piece of furniture because good brass hardware not only serves the utilitarian purpose as handles for opening drawers and doors but if properly selected harmonize with the motif of the furniture and plays its part in the general effect.

Mrs. Customer in the majority of cases is not versed in period styles but almost always is attracted by the general effects in a piece of furniture. Being attracted is the opportunity for the dealer to learn her likes and dislikes, the time to lead her to more suitable pieces which you will by this time have learned she is interested in seeing and finally to what goal of our ambition, a sale.

There are thousands of designs and patterns of modified old brasses and there are many more new creations, which goes to prove that brass hardware as it is conservatively used today on furniture has become an important part of the general make up of the piece of furniture. Details do count and while drawer knobs may appear to be insignificant items they are said to be the eyebrows of a piece of furniture and if you would change your appearance and attractiveness, try shaving your eyebrows.

Freight Shipments of Furniture

Valuable Information for Manufacturers and Dealers

By C. S. RATHEN

THE COST of moving furniture from point of manufacture to the dealer is an important item, particularly when the traffic is moved in less than carload quantities for long distances, due to the fact that furniture is among the highest rated articles in the classification and in many cases the cost of shipments by express is less than the cost by freight by reason of the high freight classification, this being particularly true as to articles in the reed and fibre furniture line.

For freight rate making purposes the country is divided into three major groups. The largest group is known as Western Classification Territory which embraces the upper peninsula of Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois and the territory west of the Mississippi River. Within this territory commodity rates are generally applied on shipments moving in carload quantities from points of production to practically all important destinations. The Southern Classification Territory is on and South of the Ohio and Potomac Rivers and East of the Mississippi River and like the Western Classification Territory carload commodity rates are applied within this territory. The Official Classification Territory is on and East of the Mississippi River and on and North of the Ohio and Potomac Rivers. Within this territory there are very few commodity rates the classification basis applying.

There are of course many inter-territorial commodity rates applying between points in Southern Classification Territory and points in Official Classification Territory and between points in Southern Classification Territory and points in Western Classification Territory. The rates between points in Official Classification Territory and Western Classification Territory are generally made the same as the rates applicable to and from Chicago or Mississippi River crossings except that some through rates are maintained between points in Official Classification Territory and the Southwestern States and the Pacific Coast States.

CHECK FREIGHT BILLS CAREFULLY

It is, of course, impossible to give here more specific explanation of the basis of rates from and to each point and in every case the consignee should have freight bills, covering shipments received by him, checked as to the rate applied and audited to ascertain if the charges are correct at the time the bill is presented or as soon thereafter as possible, this to be done by the traffic department of the local Chamber of Commerce or if such a department is not maintained then by a freight auditing concern located in the territory from which the shipment moves or is consigned. It must always be borne in mind that a common carrier cannot legally charge any more or less than the published tariff rates and it is just as important to the party who pays the transportation charges to know that such charges are correct as to avoid the subsequent payment of undercharges on bills presented by the carrier several months or years after the transaction has been closed.

In the larger furniture manufacturing centers the manufacturers maintain carloading departments, the purpose being to consolidate less than carload shipments from one or several manufacturers to one or several dealers at a common point. This method greatly reduces the hazard of transportation reducing the possibility of damage and expedites the movement while at the same time effects a saving in the transportation cost. This method of transportation, of course, cannot be applied to all points but only to such points where it is possible to accumulate sufficient tonnage to make up a minimum carload. However, dealers located outside the larger centers to which these consolidated carload shipments are made receive the benefit of these consolidated cars by shipments being sent to a given break bulk point and reshipment from that point to final destination in less than carload quantities and while this, at times, does not effect a saving in the transportation cost as against the less than carload charge from point of origin to final destination it gets the property to destination in quicker time and in better shape as many of the transfers from car to car at junction points are eliminated. The retailers should take advantage of this carloading arrangement in every possible way either by pooling their shipments with other dealers in the same locality or by buying in carload quantities, bearing in mind that the carload minimum weight on furniture ranges from 10,000 pounds to 20,000 pounds per car according to the articles loaded and the territory of movement.

PENALTIES OFTEN INCURRED

In connection with the classification of furniture the carriers have provided specific rules as to how the different articles of furniture should be packed for shipment. These rules are changed from time to time and it would not serve any useful purpose to quote the present rules here. These packing specifications apply to articles of furniture which are returned by the retailer to the manufacturer or reshipped by the retailer to the same extent that they apply on shipments from the manufacturer to the dealer. This fact is not generally appreciated by the retailer as a result of which a penalty of from 15% to 25% is at times assessed against shipments which do not comply with these requirements. The manufacturer and the retailer should therefore see to it that all goods shipped by them are packed in strict accordance with the classification requirements.

BAD ORDER SHIPMENTS

By reason of its nature furniture is susceptible to damage not only from rough handling but by reason of the finished surface coming into contact with other freight loaded into the car as well as water damage due to defective cars. Before accepting any shipment from the carrier or signing the receipt for same, the consignee, be he the manufacturer or the dealer, should carefully inspect same and if found to be damaged call for an inspection by the representative of the carrier and secure a bad order notation on the freight bill or receipt given to the carrier for the property. In cases where it is not possible to make such an inspection and to ascertain if damage exists account of the method employed in packing, the damage being of a concealed nature, the goods should be inspected immediately upon arrival at the receiving rooms of the consignee and if damage is discovered for which the carrier is responsible, the agent of the delivering line should be immediately notified and called upon to make an inspection of the damaged article. In such cases the carriers require that such notification be given to them within fifteen days after delivery of the property to the consignee. There has heretofore been a lack of co-operation on the part of the retail dealer in getting proper bad order notations on freight bills or delivery receipts and in not promptly reporting cases of concealed damage to the carriers for such damage even though it was apparent that the damage occurred while the property was in the possession of the carriers. We repeat, therefore, that all furniture should be inspected immediately upon arrival and if necessary unpacked to ascertain its condition. Under no circumstances should furniture be permitted to lay around freight stations refused by consignees because it is offered to them in a damaged condition, the goods should be accepted and the necessary arrangements made for repairs. It is the desire and purpose of the manufacturer and jobber of furniture to so pack the goods that it will reach their customers in good order, this is not always possible due to the hazard of transportation.

FILING OF CLAIMS

In the presentation of claims for loss or damage the railroads standard claim form should be used by the claimant and the claim supported with the original bill of lading, the original paid freight bill with proper bad order notation thereon or if the damage is of a concealed nature concealed damage statements properly executed by both the shipper and consignee; the original or certified copy of the invoice showing the value of the property and a detailed statement of how the amount of the claim is arrived at, that is the material and labor expense and incidental expenses incurred by reason of the damage. In addition to the actual labor expense so incurred a percentage of overhead expense should be added to the repair labor cost. Generally speaking from an investigation made, the proper percentage of overhead to be added to labor expense is 50% of the labor cost so that if the labor expense is at the rate of 50 cents per hour the claim should be filed on the basis of 75 cents per hour.

Where any question arises regarding the transportation of furniture in which you are interested the matter should be taken up with the proper official of the railroad. The management and operation of a railroad is divided into different departments and the proper officer should be addressed in order to get prompt consideration, for example, if the question concerns a rate the matter should be taken up with the General Freight Agent, if the matter concerns a claim it should be handled with the Freight Claim Agent.

By proper co-operation between the shippers and the carriers many of the difficulties which have been experienced in the past will be obviated.

BRINGING THE HOME TO THE STORE

One of the cleverest uses of a picture I ever saw was that adopted by a prominent furniture store in a recent exhibit in New York. There was a window display in which a delightful room was furnished. At the back of the window display there was ostensibly a large French window with attractive draperies to decorate it. A painted landscape the exact size of this window was placed behind it to give the effect of a view out of the window, and it served in the most wonderful way to give the observer a feeling of real home environment. One could just visualize the charm of a finely located country home, looking out upon well kept lawns into a fine countryside, to see how the furniture would look in its proper surroundings.

It is often difficult for the furniture shopper to picture the dealer's wares in their arbitrary store setting. Even an unframed picture, as in the instance cited, serves a splendid purpose in creating little rooms for the successful display of household goods, and making selection a simpler and happier process.

Furniture Finishes

A Complete Treatise for Manufacturer and Retailer

By WALTER K. SCHMIDT

WOOD finishing, as done today in our furniture factories, is becoming an art. The heads of finishing departments are confronting problems that a few decades ago were never thought of. Few people, when they enter a retail store, give any thought to, or have any conception of the many stages the wood has passed through. Yes, we question whether to say the furniture buyer realizes the increasing difficulties of the wood finishing foreman. We all know and possibly realize in our own way that cabinet woods are becoming scarcer, but this does not suffice to drive home a realization of the real problem. We see the finished product displayed, and naturally do not concern ourselves to the details necessary to produce them.

The last twenty years have worked wonderful changes. We produced a standard of wood finishing, never equaled in the world's history. We have processes that do in hours, what previously required days. So gradual, but steadily forward, has been this progress, that unless drawn to our immediate attention, the requirements of the finishing room will be beyond the capacity of its artisans. Do we realize that years ago, there was no necessity of using veneer? We did it to get beautiful figures, but woods of any kind were so plentiful, that solid this or that, became the selling point. But now, how different! But the general public does not concern itself. All they say is, "Furniture is higher than it used to be." Yes, it undoubtedly is, and it's a whole lot better furniture than was ever made before. We have made construction advancement. A veneered piece today, is more permanent than any solid piece. It is stronger for one thing, not so apt to check, and with our scientific drying, the moisture content, which is always normally present, is taken into consideration, considered in every phase the piece passes through.

Stacking lumber for years is no longer necessary. Drying systems safeguard the finished product all through the various stages. The industry has met each difficulty, and steadily increased efficiency in every branch so that today American Furniture, grade for grade, tops the world's products.

In this article we are primarily concerned in the processes of finishing, steadfastly believing that if the buyer, the seller, and user be given a detailed insight into wood finishing as done today, it would tend to make for a greater appreciation of the wonderful achievements in wood finishing.

Finishers themselves may profit by what might be termed an open forum for an exchange of ideas. It of course stands to reason that a table selling for twenty dollars is not going to receive the same treatment that does the two hundred dollar table. But basic principles of doing things correctly must stand forth as the governing requisites to obtain results, and remain as a standard of procedure.

So then, in setting down the details of the various steps of wood finishing, it is hoped to do so in a manner that produces a greater degree of appreciation for the efforts required to attain modern results. First, by the ultimate owner, user, by the buyer and retailer, that he can intelligently dispense the information to his customer and thus make him a more satisfied owner.

This step forward will spell a great encouragement to those actively engaged in the wood finishing field, they feeling that their labors are being appreciated, will be spurred to greater accomplishments. Situations of this kind are a necessity. The industry is face to face with an apprentice problem, much greater than generally realized. We don't want to stand still. That would be going backward. We must advance, advance in the face of wood problems, and unless we do, we cannot hope to live up to the high standard now attained. No, we will not even be able to maintain it. The beauty of wood is becoming recognized more and more, from the fact that our newer homes are using panels to a greater degree, and this is largely due to our high achievement in wood finishing.

Do we realize that on one hand, our industry is battling with wood problems, and on the other, the home owner is just beginning to realize that his prettiest walls are figured wood panels? Thus the finishers must come to the rescue, and make possible the use of every inch of wood.

Then, knowing the art of wood finishing becomes a necessity. We call it art, and claim a justification for the application. Schools throughout the country are beginning to teach it, laying down its principles. Their instructions are doing something for a future generation, possibly little appreciated now, they find themselves suddenly thrust against a problem little considered heretofore. They, too, are groping for methods to meet the demands brought on by an increasing population against a decreasing raw material. Therefore, it is felt that the forester says, "Every tree you plant helps some, but plant more trees," we say the same thing. Every time we plant an idea that helps to better wood finishing we help the forester to catch up with the demand for cabinet woods.

The processes of wood finishing are many, and can be said to compare with the old time adage, "As you sow, so shall you reap," for your final results depend on nothing more than the preparation of the wood in the white.

There is, in wood finishing especially, a right and a wrong way of doing things. So many short cuts are offered that produce seemingly satisfactory results. These possibly have the appearance in their finished state, of having been correctly done. But alas, time invariably spells the answer, and there is no chance to compare an article done wrong, with that which has been produced with processes fundamentally correct.

The proper preparation of the wood is indeed a broad statement, but for briefness, we have to obviate a detailed treatise of wood drying, whether by kiln or otherwise. It must be taken for granted that the woods are properly dried.

Beginning then with perfectly dry material for the construction work, we enter upon the proper preparation of the wood.

SPONGING AND SANDING

THE first question that is natural to be asked is, "Why do you sponge the wood?" Laying stress upon having it properly dried to begin with, and then afterwards wetting it again. The answer, in brief: to bring out the beauties of the wood and to clean out the pores, so as to make filler accessible, and last but not least, to raise the fibres so that they may be sanded off, so that when the water stains are applied, or in fact, any stains, they will not become an objectionable feature in the smoothing of the stained coat.

After a piece has been finished, as we say when it leaves the cabinet room, it should be sponged with a wool sponge containing sufficient water so that when it is passed over the work it moistens the surface. No sponge stroke should leave water in its wake. That would be apt to cause difficulties, especially on thin veneering, and the operator, whenever he finds that water is left behind, should retrace that stroke and pick up the water immediately. The work is then allowed to dry and when thoroughly dry, sanded with very fine sandpaper. Now it depends upon the kind of wood we are using and the style of finish being produced, whether open pore or closed pore. In a closed pore finish it means that the wood is going to be filled, and in that case the pores should be opened by passing over the work with a picking brush to take out all of the sap and gummy material that is usually in the pores of the wood. This brush will loosen, not only the gummy substances, but also the fine dust which has been forced in the pores in the process of sanding.

Next thoroughly dust off the work, and for this purpose, the blow-pipe or a spraying machine is best of all. When such is not at hand, the brisk use of a dusting brush is necessary.

In open pore finishes, the picking brush is not always resorted to. Dusting will suffice. In close grained woods, where filling is not considered requisite, care should be taken in the sanding to have an absolutely uniform pressure in the sanding block. Machine sanding takes care of this, but in hand sanding do not allow the use of sandpaper, without the use of a block, because when the pressure of the fingers alone is used there is danger of causing depressions between the grain of the wood. These depressions in many finishes are hard to overcome. In the old days when varnish was piled on, producing a glass-like coating, this danger did not manifest itself.

It is well for every finisher to know that the simple specifying of number 0 or double 00 sandpaper does not always get him the desired fineness. While some manufacturers have adopted a uniformity of grading for their papers, there is still a few whose grading is not standard and in these cases it is better to buy to match sample.

Sanding must always be done with the grain. In the act of preparing the wood, sponging and sanding, the wood is first sanded after the piece is prepared, then sponged, then sanded, then it will be ready for the staining process.

This constitutes the process of finishing the white. Today the up-to-date manufacturers lay more stress upon this part of the finishing process than ever before. They have learned from experience that a properly "polished" (polished being the term used on the continent for preparing furniture in the white for any style of finish) piece presents a much classier appearance when finally completed, requires less touching up, less fussing in the finishing room than does the one that is poorly polished.

After a piece has been finished in the white, has been properly sponged, it receives its stain coat. Factory production is one thing, staining in the store is another, refinishing, changing the color still another, and the stain work that applies to these different headings must necessarily be given during the time of treating the subject separately. But the subject of staining generally, as employed in the factory today, being completely in the hands of the foreman finisher, becomes a matter of having the stain properly applied, a matter of the selection of color, and either of purchase or making of the stain itself.

The application of stain in production plants varies greatly. It may be applied with a brush, rags, sponge, spray, or it may be done by dipping. A treatise of all these various methods is impossible in our space.

STAINING

STAINING is the process of giving a color to the wood, either enhancing the natural shade or producing a color to conform with adopted standards. Staining is done with three mediums or classes of stains: those that are soluble in water (and sometimes called acid stains), those soluble in spirits (alcohols), and those that are soluble in oils. Water stains are solutions of dye materials, usually anilines that in their solutions give color that is fast to light. Some makers have termed them acid stains to differentiate them from the ordinary water soluble dyes, because an acid or some sort of mordant has been added to guarantee non-fading results. For it must be known that many anilines, especially those of basic formation, are soluble both in water as well as spirits, and thus it follows that anilines that are soluble in spirits, fade. Therefore, the writer uniformly says to avoid spirit stains. There are a few exceptions, where spirit stains may be called fast to light, but the expense of producing them far exceeds any other recommendations which may be said for them.

Oil stains are generally prepared from oil soluble anilines and the browns build upon asphaltum and glysonite gums. These, it is known, produce a too light brown solution, with an orange tint when weak solutions are employed. But as a class, oil stains cannot be recommended as fast to light. They may be coated with air impervious materials, but oxidation takes place, only much slower, when so protected. Their chemical change is slowed up when so coated and especially when kept away from the light.

With this brief description of stains, the finisher may well resort to a thorough acquaintance of the available results obtained by the use of water stain and fortify his argument that there is no better vehicle with which to penetrate the pores of the wood than water. There are a few exceptions, such as in the highly resinous pines, where water stains are difficult to apply, but in these the writer would suggest the use of asphalt base oil stains and to hold them down to these brown shades.

Stains are applied in three manners, brushing, wiping or spraying. The latter, however, is still an exception to the rule; usually the brush is relied upon.

The application of water stains with the brush, is done by following the grain. It is not merely the spreading of the stain over the work, but there should be with it comprehension, by the stainer, of the woods that are being stained, as to their absorptive qualities. For example: it naturally follows that hard woods are slower of absorbing stains than soft woods. Therefore in the case of the former, in order to get a uniform shade it sometimes becomes necessary to take advantage of what the artisans term "the laying off of stain." Where it is seen that the wood is taking on the stain too readily, let him wipe out his brush and blend off the stain with the dry brush, and where the wood appears exceptionally hard, let him repeat the laying off operation, until his eye tells him that a uniform coloring has taken place.

It will be found that sap parts of the wood will take on stain very readily and in these cases, it is well to wet the work with water first to such a degree as will reduce the absorption of the stain coat that it will harmonize with the normal part of the wood. This stain coat is allowed to dry, usually twenty-four hours, and before going on with the application of the other stains, a suggestion relative to the application of water stains to very thin veneers, will not be amiss.

It has been found that water stains, when cold and freely applied to exceptionally thin veneers, are apt to cause trouble, and likewise has it been found that in the application of stains to this wood, a hot stain quickly applied will do no damage and yet produce the same color. Being hot, it dries quickly and yet leaves its shade behind.

After water stains are thoroughly dry in the closed pore work, the filler follows. There are various methods pursued in the treatment of the stain coat, which will be given in the chapter on filling. But the most commonplace treatment is a very light sanding only sufficient to break off the little fibres or fuzz, but in no case must the sanding cut through the stain coat.

The application of spirit stains is the same, but is rarely resorted to in the proper wood-finishing of the day. They are employed usually on very cheap work, toys, etc., and there is really no need of sponging this kind of work. A spirit stain does not raise the grain as much as water stain, nor does it penetrate as much, and if it is desired to sand this work, would recommend it being done after a surface coat has been applied. This protects the stain and the protruding fuzz is easily broken off.

The application of oil stains is done mostly with the brush. It, as well as water stain, can be applied with rags, but the writer prefers the brush. Oil stains are not sanded. They are given a protecting coat, usually of shellac. This material has been found the best of any, not only to protect the oil stain, but to keep it from mixing with any of the subsequent finishing coats that may be desired.

The stains which are applied with the air-brush, are a new innovation. They usually contain a certain amount of pyroxylin solutions, and these are being supplanted with wood lacquer, but the color being spirit soluble, cannot be said to be fast to light, although when in this intimate mixture seem to live longer than when applied in spirit solution only.

The process of applying stains by dipping can be employed with any kind of a stain. It is merely a case of immersion and getting the work out without having the so-called "runs," which, when dry, will form streaks difficult to dispose of. Dipping processes as a rule, go with the cheap grades of work and quantity production.

TEMPERATURE EFFECT ON STAINS

THE question has often been asked whether the temperature of a stain has anything to do with the resultant color. Textile dyers lay a good deal of stress on the temperature at which their dyeing is done, and even the length of time that the process occupies. There is no such question as "time" that can be applied to wood staining, outside of the manner in which stains are applied, such as wiping off, laying off, and blending out. The more time that these consume, the greater amount of dye or stain can be applied.

We are all familiar with holding back stains and the various methods by which this is accomplished in order to avoid the different textures of the wood.

It is the writer's idea that if it were practical, a temperature say about 100° F would be more desirable than that of the ordinary workroom. When the wood to which stain is applied is cold, penetration and absorption are slower, and if perchance the work is to be wiped, the lower the temperature the more stain will be wiped off. Should we attempt to stain with heated material, we would at once court difficulties arising from the fact that the stain in the beginning would be warmer than at the end, with the danger of a certain amount of difference in the shade which would be a direct proportion to the difference in temperature.

One would naturally ask, "What are the benefits of a warmer stain, why go to the trouble of heating it," even if it were practical to keep at a uniform temperature. Those who have carefully observed the results of water stain on open pore woods must have noticed that the pores are not always colored. An increase of temperature obtains these results better than the normal temperature of the room, because a thin hot liquid will spread and penetrate more than when it is at a low temperature. Again, the increased temperature assists the stain in penetrating the wood fibers to a greater degree, thus eliminating the possibility of cutting through when sanding. Therefore it is safe to conclude that temperature is worthy of consideration, and thus bring out the point that when the shade falls off it may be due to the fact that work brought in from a cold store room has not taken on much stain as the same work which has been warmed up to the temperature of the room.

This brings out a thought due to an incident that might be said was so small as to avoid consideration.

Our attention was drawn to some stain with which it was practically impossible to produce the same shade as the previous lot which had been made out of the same powders and according to the same formula. It looked the same, acted the same, but when it was dry and had received the first coat of shellac, it was a bit lighter. The foreman had had experience in what he called "falling off of shade" and it worried him, and after going through all of the possibilities for error it occurred to us that he might have changed his supply of water. It so happened that he had resorted to a drinking water of the city which had been recently piped into his department, the nicest sparkling water that anyone would want, but it had a hardness of 29 degrees, and this hardness was made up of bicarbonate of lime and magnesia with considerable traces of sulphate, chlorides, and iron compounds. Previously he had been using exhaust steam which gave him a soft warm water and a complete solution of every particle of dye, which undoubtedly and unfortunately was not the case when he used the city water. This little incident merely serves to bring out the possibilities of minor troubles but it also serves to show us that soft water is a much better solvent than cold water and especially when it is a hard water.

It would not be practical at this time to suggest the use of a warm stain, but some day when you run on to an exceptionally hard piece of wood, try a hot dye solution and you will be convinced that it penetrates better, dries quicker, and will not raise a veneer any more than a cold stain would raise it, and we believe for uniformity, when once accustomed to its use, it will excel a slow drying stain especially in cold weather.

STAIN PRECAUTIONS

IN ORDER to stain wood properly so as to be sure that it is done economically and with a certainty of results, it is absolutely necessary that the operator should not only be able to prepare his stains properly but that he also must have at least a fair knowledge of the different woods as regards their adaptability and susceptibility toward a certain stain.

It is probably a well known fact that the same stain applied to different woods will yield a very different shade or color. This is due, not only to the color of the wood itself, but also to the chemicals naturally present in the wood, some of which play a vital part in the production of modern finishes. Chief among these chemicals is tannin, or tannic acid, which, being present in many of our woods in larger or smaller quantities, produces on many of the stains chemical action varying in result according to the amount of the tannin present in the wood.

For instance, let us take under consideration the chemical bichromate of potash. Every finisher is familiar with this chemical which comes in orange colored crystals, and which is sometimes furnished in ground form so as to make their solution easier. Suppose we dissolve four ounces of bichromate of potash in a gallon of water, and apply the resulting solution to a kind of wood which contains very little, if any tannin, such as pine. When the water has evaporated, we find a light yellow color, which, unfortunately is not very fast to light, and so, in this case, is worthless. However, let us take the same stain and apply a coat to a wood which naturally contains a large amount of tannin, such as oak. In this case we find after the stain has had time to thoroughly dry out, a brownish-yellow shade which is quite permanent. The difference between the two shades produced is of course, due to the tannin. In the case of the oak wood, we had a large amount of tannin. The bichromate of potash reacted with this, producing the brown coloring material. Similar, but varying results are obtained with walnut and mahogany, as both of these woods contain fair amounts of tannic acid.

Again, suppose we have a solution of sulphate of iron, or as it is often called, ferrous sulphate. Dissolve one ounce in a gallon of water, and stain a piece of white wood or any wood which does not contain tannin. The result will be negative. Now apply the solution to ash, oak or maple, and we find a beautiful shade of gray. In the case of oak, very deep shades of gray can be produced verging into black and a number of formulas for gray stains have very recently been published. The color produced is due to a reaction between the tannin and the sulphate of iron, forming tannate of iron, the color-producing chemical.

It is thus seen from the above examples that something more than simply a drying or evaporation of the solvent takes place. There is also a chemical change which takes place. This chemical change will go on sometimes very slowly until one or the other of the chemicals has been exhausted, or used up. Therefore the drying of a stain is important, and in order to obtain reliable results it is necessary that proper drying time should be given the stain, especially if any chemicals are employed in the staining process. There seems to be a growing tendency to shorten the drying time of the stain in order to speed up production, and it would be well to watch this carefully and see that the work is not forced too much, else uncertain and variable results are apt to follow.

Stains made up of aniline dyes reach their final shade much quicker than those made up of dyes and chemicals. Stains containing chemicals should be allowed to dry from twelve or twenty-four hours at normal temperature, and with a good circulation of fresh air. Whatever chemical changes are to take place will have been finished completely within that period of time.

Some shades require that the work be given two coats of stain, and where this is the case, it is a good plan to allow twenty-four hours between each coat. Sand the first coat lightly after it is dry, and then apply the second coat. This is essential, no matter whether the stain is composed of anilines or chemicals, permanency of results being always the goal.

In connection with this matter of producing a color by means of two coats of stain, it is well to emphasize strongly the fact that aniline colors cannot be used together indiscriminately. There are a number of types of aniline dyes, or coal tar colors, the chief classes of which are the acid colors and the basic colors. The finisher, not being a chemist, cannot of course be expected to know to what class a certain color belongs, and it thus follows that many pounds of color are wasted yearly in an effort to produce a certain shade through the intermixing of colors of different types antagonistic to one another.

The effect of mixing different types of color is not always at once apparent. Many times a stain is made up which at first gives no indication of the chemical change that is bound to take place later or is taking place. Later on, however, the turbid condition of the stain clearly shows that a chemical reaction has taken place; that a precipitate has been formed and part of the coloring material thrown out of the solution. It will be seen that definite results are impossible with a stain of this nature. As long as any chemical reaction is going on the stain is an unstable compound. There is, however, a very definite point at which the change will stop and this occurs when the acid has been neutralized by the alkali.

This means a definite end of the reaction. It is always better to discard a stain composed of acid and basic colors, and to substitute something else, as it is risky business to use stains made in this way. It will be readily seen that this is expensive, many pounds of stain being utterly wasted during a year. The goods are apt to be returned for refinishing because they did not match with a previous shipment or because they were not uniform.

The above also applies to chemicals. Let us take a concrete example to make the matter clear. It is known that a coat of sulphate or iron applied to wood containing tannin produces a grey to black shade, if followed when dry by a coat of some alkali, as for instance, carbonate of soda turns it brown.

It might at first seem natural to attempt to secure the desired shade by means of a one-coat stain—that is by combining the two chemicals in one solution. Suppose we do that very thing. Immediately we have a cloudy turbid solution because of the fact that the two chemicals have reacted, producing a third, which in this case would be oxide of iron. This chemical will settle to the bottom of the container if left to stand for a short time, leaving a solution of salt, depending upon the kind of alkali we have used.

This experiment shows clearly that a certain shade may be easily produced by using two coats of stain but that it is impossible to produce it by mixing the two ingredients into one solution. It also shows the value of practical experimenting which every finisher should make as the lessons learned in this way are invaluable.

Cleanliness is essential in making stains. All dishes and containers should be kept perfectly clean. Never use tin or iron vessels if it can be avoided. This is absolutely necessary if water stains are to be kept for any length of time.

Hot water should be used for dissolving stain powders although cold water will do just as well. Hot water is preferred simply because the stain powder will dissolve quicker and more readily. If cold water is used, longer stirring is necessary. When we say cold water is as good as hot, we assume, of course, that the amount of stain powder is not excessive as hereinafter explained.

Some finishers have a bad habit of boiling their stain in order to secure a thorough solution. In some cases this is all right, but we would strongly advise against it for the following reasons:

In the first place, it is entirely unnecessary. Any stain can be thoroughly dissolved by using hot water and agitation. Second: Some colors are sensitive to heat, and undergo decomposition when the temperature is brought to the boiling point (212 degrees F.).

The best way to dissolve a stain powder is to accurately weigh out the required amount and place it in the bottom of a suitable mixing dish (generally an earthenware crock). Now add a little hot water and mix until a smooth paste is obtained. Add gradually the remainder of the water, stirring constantly until you are sure the stain is all dissolved. It is a good plan to filter it if you are not sure. By following these directions no trouble will be experienced with the stain powder floating on the surface of the water or adhering to the sides of the dish, where it is difficult to remove.

All chemicals should be kept in air tight containers, especially if there are any gasses or vapors to contend with. The very air we breathe contains carbonic acid gas, a chemical reagent to which some colors are more or less susceptible. It stands to reason that a stain first made from prime materials must continue to be made from them in order to be uniform at all times. Therefore, take care of your chemicals and colors, and many of your troubles will disappear. Many difficulties encountered by the finisher, which mean that stains must be continually doctored, can be directly traced to an improper handling of the materials, or to dirty dishes, containers, storage in metal cans, and so forth.

When a formula is once obtained, weigh out the ingredients carefully and accurately. It is essential to the proper working of any formula that all of the stain material must be dissolved, else the true balance or shade of color will not be maintained. Some colors dissolve more readily than others, or in greater amounts.

For instance, you will find that the nigrosines will have a greater percentage of solubility than the oranges. When you go beyond that percentage heat will greatly increase the amount of color that can be dissolved. When this is done however, the stain must be applied hot, because if the solution cools off, some of the color will precipitate, which of course changes the stain. It is a safe rule to use no greater amounts of stain powder than will dissolve at normal room temperature, say about 60 degrees F. When heat is recommended for dissolving the stains it is simply as an aid to solution, not that we may crowd the liquid with all the solid materials it will take up. As soon as a stain is chilled, crystallization takes place, and when this occurs the crystallized material should be dissolved again with the aid of heat.

Crystallization is an interesting study. When a stain undergoes this change, it must be remembered that it takes a great deal more color than one can realize at first.

In some cases practically all of the stain is removed from solution by this means. Sometimes chilling a stain will affect one color and not another. For instance, we might have a solution composed of yellow, red and black. If we chilled the stain we might find that all the black had crystallized out leaving the red and yellow only in solution. It is easy to understand that this would throw the color far from the right shade, and it would take a lot of work in order to repair the damage.

In conclusion, study the colors and chemicals you are using; watch them carefully and when anything does go wrong, endeavor to satisfy yourself as to just what caused the trouble in order that it may not happen again. A wise man never makes the same mistake twice.

FILLING

FILLING is the most important operation in wood finishing. It must not be slighted and if imperfectly done is bound to cause trouble sooner or later.

The adopted methods of today are comparatively new after all. The first record treating on wood filling was published in 1809, entitled "The Shining Up of Wood Work" in which the author says, "The pores of the wood ought to be smoothed up with a mixture made of ground chalk or rotten stone colored like the wood and mixed with glue water. Cover the work to be shined up with the mixture, then wipe off and when hard and dry, smooth off finely with shark-skin and hair cloth."

From that day on, various materials were tried as wood fillers, until we arrived at the present day methods which invariably depend upon certain formations of silica, which are marketed as silex.

Taking into consideration the fact that good filling means a perfect surfacing and leveling up of the wood upon which is to be produced the final finish, it is easily realized that only the greatest care should be taken in preparing the foundation.

Historically it might be well to know what the materials were and consisted of in the attempts in the last hundred years to fill wood.

Whiting, chalk, sometimes finely powdered sawdust, and quite recently starches, particularly corn starch were used. It was found that starches, owing to their spherical atoms did not adhere firmly, and being of a vegetable origin were not free from decomposition. The chalks being present mostly as carbonates did not constitute a permanent material. It took years to find out what really constituted the deficiency in the many materials used, but the general classification brought them down to two classes, vegetable or mineral.

The vegetable class showed its deficiency first, and then it was found that the minerals such as the chalks, had their faults. It was realized that it required an inert material, one that would not be affected by any liquid, either water, oil, spirit, alkalies, or acids, and finally it was located in the silica, certain classes of which are admirably adapted for filling purposes.

The special qualification lies in the fact that this rock when ground to the necessary fineness, retains its needle shape fragments, its irregular formation of particles so that when it is ready for filling purposes, it will pass through a 300 mesh sieve. This fineness is attained by grinding the rock under stone rollers with water trickling over the rock continuously, and running off into vats. The finer particles are floated along through a series of vats and thus we arrive at the term "floated silex." When the final vat is allowed to dry, it is put through hopper-sieves, or bolting cloth very much like one sees in

■ flour mill, making absolutely certain that no coarse particles are allowed to go through.

The average formula based upon its silex is pure linseed oil, pure driers of the Jap series, and colored pigments (all ground in oil) of sufficient quantity to make the desired shade. These are marketed ■ paste filler, and ground together so intimately that they form ■ paste which is ready for ■■■ by the addition of ■ vehicle such ■ naphtha.

The advantages of silex lie in the fact that its fineness and its irregular shapes permit it to be packed solidly into the pores of the wood. The vehicle, linseed oil, a drying oil together with the drier, Jap, ■■■ there only in sufficient quantity to aid in the setting of these minute particles to practically ■ glass-like solid compound. The small quantities of mineral colors required for the production of the shade ■■■ also held in place by the aforesaid vehicles. The naphtha acts only ■■■ an agent to help in spreading and leading into the pores the actual filler for it ■ only a mechanical agent evaporating long before the filler begins to set.

Fillers are usually applied with a brush. Brush manufacturers now ■■■ delivering ■ special flat brush intended especially for filling. Buyers ■■■ tempted by low prices, but these always deliver an inferior stock brush. A filling brush especially should be full stock, and will be found far the cheapest in the end.

The application of filler is easy, there being but one thing required, and that ■ no slighting of any part of the work, thoroughly rubbed in the pores, crosswise of the grain, with no sparing of elbow grease. Then after twenty to thirty minutes, when the color of the applied filler begins to change, this brought about in the process of drying, which is only the evaporation of the naphtha, and the dull appearance manifests itself, producing the whitish color, or where there are dark fillers they will take on ■ greyish color, we have arrived at the time for the rubbing off.

Many materials ■■■ used for this purpose. Excelsior (this is only ■ fair material), flax or hemp, sea moss, cotton waste, the latter probably being the best.

Excelsior is apt to remove ■■■ of the filler from the pores. The danger of rubbing filler out of the pores comes from the fact that the operator has not waited long enough for the filler to properly set before commencing the rubbing-off process. Too much stress cannot be given to this point. The operator knows that it is more difficult to rub off ■■■ the drying process proceeds, and thus he is continually tempted to start too soon. Foreman finishers say that if the ■■■ would only wait for the proper time there would be no fear as to the results of the filling job.

Another important thing is the amount of space covered with filler before it is ready to rub. Here is the idea: If one ■■■ is spreading filler and it goes onto the rubbers, the work should so be gauged that the amount of time intervening is just right for the settling of the filler. But where one person applies the filler he is apt to spread ■■■ than he can care for later, and thus he hastens his work and the results ■■■ that he rubs some before it is dry enough, and ■■■ of it will be too hard, the entire scheme of things tending to make ■ poor job.

In mouldings and carvings it is impossible to clean out all the filler. Here one must resort to the use of the picking brush and picking sticks. The latter ■■■ easily be made from pieces of hickory, pointed like ■ lead pencil on one end, and say a ¼" to ½" width on the other end, brought down to ■ flat chisel-shaped end.

A point we wish to mention is the settling of fillers. It is obvious that ■ material like silex will settle to the bottom of the pail, and therefore in dipping the brush, you should give it a circular lifting movement, so ■■■ to keep the material continually agitated. In that way the filling material is evenly distributed over the work.

The manufacturers of filling materials have brought the prices down and their quality up, with ■■ unvarying uniformity ■■ that furniture manufacturers no longer attempt to prepare their own filler but prefer to buy it already prepared. They are thus assured of the uniformity of the article. They know the quantities they consume would require special machinery in order to produce a filler whose ingredients ■■■ so uniformly mixed ■■ to ■■■■ a continual supply of one shade. This also applies as well to the schools. A good quality of wood filler supplied in a tin receptacle will retain its efficiency throughout the entire school year. The instructor ■■■ supply the student with the necessary quantity for his job.

There have been on the market liquid fillers, and it is well to know that such ■ material has existed. They were oils and driers containing ■ small percentage of very fine silex and were used for dipping or applying with the brush. They ■■■ not successful, they do not get into the pores, there is no pressure behind the solid, and they have been known to cause trouble, the aftermath such ■■ settling, pin holes and other finishing ills of which will be spoken later.

After the filling operation is complete, there follows ■ surfacer which up to this writing is usually shellac, which is conceded to be the best material. It has qualifications that no other substance ■■■■ to possess. During the ■■■ when this material was scarce, finishers were forced to use many substitutes, but it cannot be said that any one of them has yet attained the qualities of pure gum shellac. The advent of wood lacquer has brought out products generally known as "wood sealers" or "intermediates" which tend to prepare the surface for the application of the wood lacquers where ■ closed pore finish is desired.

After the surfacing coat has been applied, it is usually followed with the material which constitutes the final finish. It may take one, two or three coats, according to the quality that is desired. At the present time these coats are what is known as "Egg-shell"—"Dull rubbed"—finishes, which ■■■■ that when the last coat is thoroughly dry they ■■■ rubbed down with pumice stone and water, this pumice stone should be FFF or finer, and always rubbed with felt pads with the grain. More or less rubbing is done according to the results desired. An oil rub, which is the ■■■ of light paraffine oils with the same pumice stone, will also produce a matt finish, but the oil must be cleaned off and all grease removed.

For this reason some finishers apply both, doing the coarse cutting with the water, and oil rubbing for the latter coat, because with the oil rubbing a smoother job is attainable. The oil left ■■■ be removed by wiping quickly and delicately with ■ rag moistened with alcohol and then cleaning off, but it is obvious that there must not be much rubbing in this process of cleaning ■■■ this has ■ tendency to bring the work to ■ polish.

There are some polished finishes still put out. This is easily accomplished for the last coat is rubbed with a polish using some very fine rotten stone with it. This has ■ tendency to level up the finish with the result that ■ mirror-like surface is attained.

Open pore finish and semi-filled finishes undoubtedly offer the greatest variety of finishes, and require more knowledge ■■ to the production of the individual styles. Open pore finishes as their name implies, ■■■ simple of production. It means that nothing has been done to fill the pores. Take fumed oak which, whether obtained by the fuming process or the staining process, the color is brought out in the better grade of work by applying a coat of linseed oil thinned with four parts of naphtha and rubbed over the smooth work. When this is thoroughly dry, give a coat of shellac and finish with wax.

There have been many so-called "flats" offered ■■ substitutes for wax which could be applied either with spray or brush, but undoubtedly the old time ■■■ with plenty of elbow grease is the best. It would be impossible to treat the various other open pore finishes, but ■■ ■ class, the above must suffice.

The semi-filled finishes take more consideration, for they embrace such finishes ■■ depend upon the various colors of their filler to produce the finish, such ■■ the greys with their white pore, the forest green with its darker green pore. Then there is the Italian oak, the Italian walnut, with its smutting and wax finish, and the artisan in ■ case of this kind will do better to work to sample than to attempt to finish from description, but in general the following procedure may be reckoned as a basis.

The work is given ■ stain coat which should be prepared in the usual manner when it comes to the smoothing thereof. Open pore finishes ■■■ better when they are produced by the fuming process, or with water stain. They ■■■ better if the wood has been sponged and sanded before staining, and the pores thoroughly cleaned out before the surfacing coat is applied.

This done, there are usually two coats of shellac, rather thin, applied, and then smoothed with exceedingly fine sandpaper, just sufficient to assure ■ continued level surface. This procedure is the ■■■■ in fumed oak, and could be finished off with wax and undoubtedly covers quite a number of finishes.

The waxing is ■■ arduous job when done well and therefore, many of our better grade open pore finishes no longer are made with the wax finish, but in place of the application of shellac, a thin coat of wood lacquer is applied, then ■ second coat of fifty-fifty strength wood lacquer, the lacquer having the advantage of ■ much tougher waterproof and heat-proof quality.

When the final coat is dry, it may be topped off by applying a thinned wax or a liquid wax, and this rubbed down while the ■■■ is still wet, with fine sandpaper. This has ■ tendency to level the coat, and ■■ the ■■■ begins to set it should be rubbed to ■ polish. It is said there is nothing better than ■ finish of this sort, especially for tables, chairs, office furniture, etc.

Many finishes which we must classify as semi-filled finishes ■■■ brought out in about the same manner as described for the open-pore finish, and there might be two classifications of these. The one where the filling is put over the final coat, such as in Italian walnut, and the other where the filling is wiped into the first finishing coat and receives the second finishing coat over the filling material. Italian walnut and Italian oak are the most popular of the finishes.

For uniform colored walnut, no other material is necessary. Sap wood is treated with ■ weak stain to bring it up to the depth of the darker wood, and when dry the entire piece gone over with the regular stain. When the final coat is thoroughly dry, sand it with extremely fine sandpaper, and dust it thoroughly again. Then apply a coat of wood lacquer, thinned with a 40% of wood lacquer thinner. When this has dried at least four hours, prepare ■ filler as follows:

Turpentine.

Finishers generally are acquainted with this style of filler which is not designed to fill the pores absolutely, but rather to give them ■ white color, and also to deposit on the little tissues bits of white so ■■ to produce in the final finish ■ grey-white effect. This white filler should be of the consistency of syrup, spread on the wood freely, and immediately rubbed in briskly and cleaned off. The first rag discarded, and the work wiped clean with ■ fresh rag. This should then be allowed to dry and it is quite necessary that it is absolutely dry before the final coat of wood lacquer is applied. This coat of wood lacquer should also be thinned with 40 per cent wood lacquer thinner.

After this coat is thoroughly dry, say four to six hours, sand with 0000 sandpaper, dust and wax.

It has been found that many finishers are apt to let their wax stand too long before they polish. The writer's experience induces him to recommend that the wax be evenly spread upon the surface, with the flat of the hand or brush, rubbed about until it begins to stiffen and then brought to a polish. This polishing should be continued until ■■ absolute gloss is procured, and sufficient friction has been maintained to produce ■ certain warmth. A finish of this kind will present ■ satisfactory surface and although it does not have the appearance of a sheet of glass over the wood, it has ■ finished appearance that immediately brings to the mind that some care has been taken in acquiring it.

It might be well to consider the various kinds of finishes that are employed today, irrespective of whether they are open pore, semi-filled or closed pore-filled finishes. Thus we find wax finish, the shellac finish, the varnish finish, gloss, dull, egg-shell, and rubbed. The lacquer finish comes as a protective coat under wax for the semi-filled and open pore finish, or for the filled, matt and rubbed finish. These finishes cover the list of so-called transparent surfaces, then follow the finishes produced by the use of enamels, and their name implies, coatings that completely hide the wood, producing their colors by the use of pigment, either in oil, varnish or lacquer.

We must not overlook the mentioning of polychrome, which although very popular a few years back, still maintains a place in the art of finishing, particularly at this time in the manufacture of lamps, candle sticks, book ends and novelties, although used in the manufacture of odd settings such as hotel lobbies, club rooms and the like.

VARNISH

SOME years ago there was a book published entitled "Wood Finisher," by F. Maire, who was also the author of "Modern Painter's Encyclopedia"—"Exterior Painting"—"Interior Painting"—"Colors," etc. The books are published by Frederick J. Drake & Company, Chicago. In glancing over the "Wood Finisher" we find several chapters on varnishing. Mr. Maire does not say what varnish is, how it is made, but he tells about the application, the polishing and rubbing varnishes. The book was written before the advent of the spray, and the subject is treated very creditably, and we will permit ourselves to touch upon some of the recommendations later.

We believe that everyone handling varnish should be absolutely familiar with the handling of varnish with the brush, and therefore we shall dwell on some of Mr. Maire's recommendations as far as they apply to our present day needs, but let us look backward to the advent of the spray.

We all remember when this time-saving proposition was first offered to the trade. It was nothing short of consternation that took hold of the general run of finishing rooms. We entirely forgot that manufacturing in the wood-working plants throughout the country was on the increase. We thought that whenever a spray gun was installed, it would mean so many more men looking for jobs. Today that entire situation is forgotten, and there are men applying varnish that would make a sorry mess out of a job were they asked to apply it with a brush.

But what did the advent of the spray gun mean to the varnish manufacturing industry? Makers of furniture didn't change their style of finish, they put in a spray machine and expected to go right on producing the same results. More results, if you please. Now, it stands to reason that the methods of application so very different meant a corresponding physical change of the material, yet producing the same result as though it were brushed. What this meant to the manufacturer of varnish was not readily appreciated by the consumer. He had a spray gun and it was up to his varnish house to supply him with a varnish that would produce the same results he had been getting by brushing. That the conditions were met by the varnish manufacturer is history, what it meant has never been told, but it is history in the laboratory throughout the country's varnish plants.

When the laity looks at a piece of furniture, they don't ask whether it was brushed sprayed or dipped. They expect wear according to the price they pay for the piece of furniture. If they buy a cheap chair and the finish does not wear, they compensate the fault by saying "I only paid so much for it."

Varnish has been brought to its high state of efficiency by Americans. A varnish finish is an American institution, and we are licensed to take full credit for it. Probably the highest state of efficiency was reached in a few years preceding the war, and during the war it is the writer's opinion that the industry committed a grave error from which it is still suffering, and which by the way, has never been appreciated by the users of varnish, and it is a question if they even realize what was being done for them by the makers of varnish. Materials became scarce, and the prices of the raw product soared, but the varnish makers stood the loss and did not advance prices such as was done by the general run of manufacturers of other commodities. They stood tremendous losses and now prices have not gone back to pre-war levels, probably never will, and still varnish is supplied at figures that do not carry with them a margin that a manufacturer is entitled to.

To the writer's mind there is too much buying on price. In the late years there is a profession sprung up, known as the "Buyer." Let us permit ourselves to analyze this individual. First, he is a member of the Purchasing Men's Association of his town, where subjects are brought up in the abstract. No shrewd buyer is going to give to a competitor any of his advantages. He could not be loyal to his concern if he did. His house may enjoy the best of credit, and have a better buying power than that of a brother member. He may be better posted. He may have studied the commodities that he is supposed to purchase, but his job is to have a weather eye out for price, and with wood finishing materials, this is fraught with certain dangers that no professional buyer can fathom. He must rely upon the foreman finisher to a large extent, and there should be a confidence between these two that makes for the best when it comes to the finish. We have said a great deal about finish, and the force of it as a selling factor, and we stand steadfast on the principle that the impression made at first by the appearance of furniture is the same as when you meet a well-dressed and groomed person. It is a salutary effect, it is a selling factor.

It is not our purpose to speak disparagingly of the buyer. If he is the broad-minded man he should be, he will get our point as it pertains to that individual who does the buying of varnish and kindred materials. For we emphasize the price, and we emphasize it to the varnish maker.

Too much varnish is sold on price. When the day arrives when the varnish man will say, "I have this particular brand that costs $2.50 per gallon by the barrel," or whatever the figures should be, for a certain specified piece of goods, then and there will begin a new era in varnish products. But when the buyer says "We have been getting a piece of goods for $1.50, I would like to give you an order at $1.45," and gives the salesman a sample to match, then the trend of quality is forced downward. Of course there are little things that can be considered. One varnish maker may have buying advantages, in short his overhead is less, and he feels that he can take on this business in hopes of getting in and selling another piece of goods on which there is more profit. But the general condition thus produced is unhealthy, and when finishing troubles arise, the "buck" is passed from one to the other, and the cycle is started all over again. There are certain things of which the varnish trade has been accused that are history. The atmosphere is healthy, save that which hovers around price.

The last decade brought out other factors which we must not fail to mention, the varnish kiln, and the drying room. They too produced their problems for the varnish maker, and when we consider the past twenty years, we really must take off our hat to the industry for how it kept pace with the advancement in the application of wood finishing materials.

Maire says under the caption of "Varnishing": "There are many different ways in which to close the finishing that it will be well to first make a general review of the most usual methods of finishing in use, and then to take them up subsequently one at a time." There can be no good varnishing done where there is dust flying about nor when the temperature is too low. It should never be below 70 degrees.

Dusting should not be done in the room, if it is it should be done one day, and the varnishing next. Keep the dust down by using oil sweeping compounds. In small shops a good scheme is to dust the work by dampening a chamois skin, not wetting it, and rub it all over the surface to be varnished. It will take up the dust and hold it. The chamois skin can be rinsed out occasionally.

The application of varnish with a brush is not the easiest thing to do. There are a few rules that must be learned:

Never apply varnish scantily.

Never finish off a flowing coat cross-wise.

Always use the brush full of varnish.

Always finish laying-off varnish with the grain of the wood.

Scanty application is common to operators who are learning. They do it because they wish to avoid sagging. But in that case they always work the varnish too much. There are few causes which produce more sagging of varnish than overworking it with the brush, especially of the flowing finishing sorts.

If the varnish is applied full it ought to be, the poor varnisher is afraid of it, and works it to the limit till it commences to set, and for fear of its sagging will finish by cross-laying with the false hope that it will prevent sagging. By using a full brush of varnish a good space can be covered at once, and laid off uniformly with the least amount of brushing, and all ended right before the setting has commenced.

If the varnish is laid off with the grain of the wood, the varnish will not sag if it has not been overworked or worked after it has commenced to set.

The application of varnish depends largely upon the class of work at hand. There is a one-coat job, which is one coat of varnish over filler and shellac, or the same with two coats of varnish, or one or two coats of rubbing varnish to be rubbed and followed with a flowing coat, or to be left with a dead finish, or again, the same with the last coat rubbed and afterwards polished. Again, there may be one or two coats of varnish over filling and shellac, to be followed with a coat of dull varnish (which contains wax).

While these may be general principles, the finisher may have noticed we have used the word "shellac." There are many substitutes for shellac, some good, and some decidedly not so good, and should have the word "substitute" printed in large letters. For be it known, that a first coater must have the qualities of shellac so that the functioning thereof will do all that shellac will do if the result of equal quantity is to be obtained.

It must be stated that not always the greater number of coats of varnish produce the finest finish. On the contrary the least number of coats of varnish of quality that can be applied to produce a certain effect will look and wear the better. This same applies to the viscosity or the thickness or heaviness of the varnish. A good thin varnish is not subject to the many varnish ills that we hear of, such as crazing, checking and the like, and one big factor is time. Remember that varnish dries from the outside in, and should never give way to the finger nail when subsequent coats are applied.

There are many little details to cover that the finisher should know, the knowledge of which can only go to better the production in any work where the application of varnish is necessary. There are certain definite rules, call them principles, that cannot be altered, they are fundamentals upon which good finishing results are built.

RUBBING AND POLISHING

AS NEARLY all furniture is rubbed or polished, it becomes necessary for the finisher to select his varnish with a great deal of care, depending upon the final result he wishes to achieve. Varnishes, of course, naturally fall into three classifications—short oil, medium and long oil, depending upon whether they contain a relatively large or small amount of oil.

A long oil varnish is one that contains a larger proportion of linseed oil than the average. Those combined in the proportion of from twenty to twenty-five gallons of oil to one hundred pounds of gum would be known as long oil varnishes.

A short oil varnish would contain about twelve gallons of oil to one hundred pounds of gum.

A medium oil varnish would naturally lie between these two extremes.

A varnish which is short in oil will dry much faster and rub easier. Ease of rubbing depends upon the amount of gum contained in the varnish and also how dry the varnish is when rubbing is attempted. A varnish must be perfectly dry before it can be rubbed and many varnishes have been condemned simply because the finish was ruined by premature rubbing. While a short oil varnish rubs easily and dries quickly, it is not so easy to apply with a brush. A varnish long in oil can be applied with a minimum amount of labor, and the highest praise that a workman can give a rubbing varnish is that it works as easily as a finishing varnish. Ease of working of course, is a great factor in selecting a varnish, although with the advent of the spraying machine it is not of such importance as it used to be.

A satisfactory rubbing or polishing varnish must work easily, flow out well and level up so as to show no brush marks. Still, the varnish must stay where it is put, and not show runs or sags. It must set up in a reasonable length of time and must dry hard to permit of rubbing or polishing in as short a time as possible.

It is understood that a varnish must sacrifice some of its wearing qualities if it is manufactured with the idea of being rubbed in a day or so, and that if durability is wanted, a considerably longer time must be allotted for thorough drying.

Rubbing or flating it is sometimes called, is accomplished with a piece of rubbing felt and powdered pumice stone in connection with water or rubbing oil. Steel wool is sometimes used and seems to work very well, especially on wood lacquers, which sometimes have a tendency to "gum up" sandpaper. Curled horsehair and southern moss are also used, but these materials are only used as makeshifts and are not employed where it is desired to produce a really fine finish. The object of rubbing is to obtain the smoothest possible surface. It is practically impossible to obtain a perfectly smooth surface when the varnish is left in its natural lustre, because of the dust constantly present in the air which settles on the varnish while it is drying, and also because of other slight imperfections which will affect the surface.

The number of coats of varnish to be applied depends entirely upon the character of the work. On high grade piano work, as high as ten or twelve coats of varnish are applied, but for most ordinary work, which is to be finished full-rubbed, two or at the most three coats are usually considered sufficient.

The first step then is to secure a perfectly smooth surface by rubbing down with a block of rubbing felt and a medium coarse pumice stone and water. Plenty of water should be used, otherwise the varnish is liable to scratch and tear because of caking on the rubbing block.

An experienced finisher can tell by the feel of the block if the varnish is caking. This is very apt to take place if a varnish is not perfectly dry. On work which has had three or four coats of varnish, a great many finishers employ two grades of pumice-stone, one a medium grade and the other a fine grade.

The rubbing felt used for this purpose is about  $\frac{3}{8}$  to  $\frac{1}{2}$  inch thick and is supplied in various degrees of firmness. The medium grade will usually be found most satisfactory. In some factories the preliminary rubbing is done with a piece of burlap, rubbing with this until the job is about half completed and then finishing with a piece of felt. The burlap will hold the pumice better than the felt and will therefore, cut more easily and quickly. It does not, however, produce such a good job and considerable care must be exercised not to cut through the coats of varnish. Rubbing with the fine pumice stone may follow directly after the preliminary coarse rubbing, provided the varnish is perfectly hard. A better plan however, is to rub with a coarse powder, let stand for twelve hours or over night, and then rub with the fine pumice stone.

The object of the fine rubbing is to make the surface as level as possible and in case the work is to be polished, to prepare it for the following operation. By using the fine pumice stone, all the scratches are removed from the surface left by the preliminary coarse rubbing.

Straight strokes should always be used in rubbing; circular or criss-cross motions should be entirely avoided. It is a good plan to mix the pumice stone and water to a thin paste, dipping the rubbing felt into this mixture from time to time as the work proceeds.

When the rubbing with coarse pumice and water has been completed, the rubbing with fine pumice stone is given, using for this a good rubbing paraffin oil instead of water. Now take an ordinary oval varnish brush, which should be dipped into the mixture of pumice stone and oil and brush lightly over the entire piece. Wipe up the oil and then sift very fine pumice stone over the work. This should be left to stand a few minutes and then wiped off, carefully brushing out all corners, mouldings, etc., using a small picking brush or stick if necessary.

If this has been carefully done, the work will be ready for shipment. There are many other ways of carrying out this process, but the above procedure will give a very nice dull-rubbed effect, and we would recommend the finisher to give it consideration.

The general opinion seems to be that the modern methods of polishing are fully equal to the somewhat laborious and slow methods still used in a few piano factories. In order to obtain a good polish, it is necessary that a good polishing liquid be employed, and a great deal depends upon the composition of such a liquid. There are thousands of formulas for polishes, but the following formula will be found to produce a very high and durable polish for a minimum amount of labor:

Paraffin oil ..... 1 gallon
Turpentine ..... 1 gallon
Oil of cedar ..... 20 ounces
Oil of citronella ..... 12 ounces

This polish should be made up in advance as it will be found to improve with age. It should be used in connection with rotten stone which should be very finely powdered, sifting or bolting it, and a pad. A piece of soft cotton waste makes an ideal polishing pad. One should be careful, however, to get a good grade of wax. The writer a short time ago, while visiting a finishing room, had occasion to notice one of the men who was polishing a very fine table top. During the process, the finisher had occasion to use a piece of waste, which he picked up from a nearby bench and started to work with. Unfortunately, the piece of waste contained a small metallic hook, which of course, scratched deeply into the varnish, ruining the finish. Therefore, carefully examine a handful of waste before you use it for any polishing operation.

The formula given above for polishing could be improved by adding a little water, but it can not be mixed with the polish as to form a clear liquid, an emulsion will result. If you do not care to add the water to the polish, take a handful of waste and saturate it with water, wringing out as dry as possible. Then rub this damp waste over the work immediately before polishing. This will supply the requisite moisture. If a plain surface is to be polished as a table top for example, one should start at the end, polishing cross-wise. This is necessary in order to be certain that the ends shall have a high a polish as the center of the top, and it must be done at the beginning of the polishing operation, otherwise the cross polishing will leave a mark. As previously stated, the polishing operation should not be done with a circular motion used for French polishing, but should be carried out with a straight stroke, going from end to end and keeping a uniform a pressure upon the pad as possible.

When the polish has been brought to the highest possible point by this method, the brilliancy may be improved by rubbing with the bare hand, employing a circular motion, using just enough polish on the hand to prevent it from sticking to the varnish.

Now comes the most difficult of the polishing operations, known as "spiriting off." A great deal of care must be exercised in doing this. Take a piece of soft cloth, sprinkle on a little alcohol and then twist tightly so as to bring out any excess and distribute the alcohol as evenly as possible through the folds of the cloth. Now, go over the surface with this pad very lightly, using a circular motion. If there is too much alcohol on the cloth, the polish is certain to be burned into and destroyed.

Considerable skill and experience is necessary to carry out this operation successfully. Speed and the correct amount of alcohol on the cloth are also vital factors in determining the perfection of the final results.

In the foregoing we have given a very good formula for polish, but nearly every finisher, for some reason or other, or due to the nature of the materials he employs, prefers one kind of polish or another. Therefore, we are giving below a few formulas for various types of polish, one of which is almost certain to fit the work at hand.

FORMULA No. 1

Raw linseed oil ..... 1 quart
Light golden oil ..... 1 quart
Water ..... 1½ quarts
Mix these well and add acetic acid ..... ½ pint
Wood alcohol ..... ¼ pint
Butter of antimony ..... 2 ounces

A few grains of Bismark brown aniline will give it a nice color. The polish should always be shaken before using.

FORMULA No. 2

Raw linseed oil ..... 1 quart
Paraffine oil ..... 1 quart
Water ..... 1 quart
Vinegar ..... 1 quart
Butter of antimony ..... ¼ pint

Shake well. If a rubbing polish is desired add two ounces of powdered rotten-stone to each pint of polish.

FORMULA No. 3

A good furniture polish and cleaner:

Use light rubbing oil ..... 14½ parts
White vinegar ..... 2 parts
Water ..... 3 parts
Wood alcohol ..... 4 parts
Butter of antimony ..... ½ part
Oil citronella ..... ½ part

To make rubbing polish, add one-half pound of rotten stone to each gallon of above.

FORMULA No. 4

Good Polish Formula.

Paraffine oil ..... 1 part
Linseed oil ..... ½ part
Butter of Antimony ..... ½ part
Vinegar ..... 1 part Water ..... 1 part
Wood alcohol ..... 1 part

Mix thoroughly. For a rubbing polish add one pound of rotten-stone to each gallon of the above mixture.

In all of the formulas which we have just given a small quantity of butter of antimony is specified. The chemical name of this material is antimony trichloride. It is a corrosive liquid, made by treating the sulphide of the ore with strong hydrochloric acid in the presence of a small quantity of nitric acid.

There are two grades of butter of antimony on the market, the crude which has a yellowish tinge and the refined which is water white and superior to the other for a good furniture polish and cleaner. Butter of antimony is an important ingredient in furniture polish for the reason that when it is added to an aqueous solution such as a mixture containing linseed oil, paraffin oil, alcohol, vinegar, etc., a heavy white precipitate is formed immediately, which remains in suspension in the liquid. This precipitate gives to the polish in a great measure its cleaning power and it is also responsible for the high lustre. Another important point which must be remembered, is that these formulas are emulsions and that before using or drawing off a small quantity, the polish should be agitated very thoroughly so as to form a homogeneous mixture of the various ingredients.

PIN HOLES, PITTING OR ROUGH WORK IN VARNISH

THESE are the results of conditions rather than due to a fault of material, and such difficulties have to be met and overcome. There are many conditions that may cause pitted or rough finish on varnished surfaces.

One of the greatest factors is the temperature, it plays the most important part, and in order to avoid the possibility of pin hole or pitted surfaces, the temperature of the room, of the material to be varnished and the varnish itself must be uniform. This does not mean that a piece of furniture can be brought into the finishing room from a cold storage room and left there for an hour or two in the belief that it will assume the temperature of both varnish and finishing room. The outer surface only would be affected by that time, and if perchance there was moisture in the store room, it would be apt to cause trouble.

This brings out the point that although two temperatures may be alike, no matter which two, if the third one does not agree, the undesired result is apt to be retained. Seventy degrees F. is probably the best temperature to maintain. Not only should this be maintained in the work room but also should it be maintained during the setting process of the varnish, and for this setting process it is just as necessary to keep the room well ventilated, with the atmosphere continually changing to avoid it becoming stagnant, the air filled with the fumes of drying varnish. If these points are not cared for, it will take longer for the varnish to dry which in itself may cause difficulties when it comes to rubbing.

When varnish is applied with a spray, it is necessary that the operator familiarize himself with the particular varnish he is to use. He should find out by experimenting what pressure to use, what distance away from the work, and if he will take the time to spray a few panels follow the foregoing suggestions, and when he has struck the right pressure, let him do the rest of his work along the same lines. By all means avoid mixing varnishes. Remember a varnish is a physical product usually made with a great deal of care, and to do a specific work. Different grades should not be mixed. Rarely have two varnishes the same drying time, nor should turpentine be added, or any other thinners.

One can readily imagine the difficulties that the work is prone to when consideration is given to the possibilities of mixtures that not only vary as to specified gravity, but also in drying time.

Too much oil in filler, is another cause for pinholes. It causes a sticky filler which in the rubbing process is pulled out of the pores, especially is this so when the naphtha begins to evaporate. Again, a filler carrying too much oil may dry a film over the surface leaving the lower part of the pore filled with moist filler, which in the process of evaporation will cause a slight eruption, these eruptions resulting in pinholes.

Pin holes are often caused in oak which has been dried by direct heat. They may also be caused in the golden oak finish, which is made from certain grades of asphaltum which contain too much coal dust. A stain of this kind will mix with the filler, and retard its drying, to the extent of causing the generating of gases in the pores. There is nothing that will overcome this stain difficulty, and when it is encountered that particular brand should be discarded. It is advisable to inspect the filling coat with a small magnifying glass, under which it will show an absolutely smooth solid surface, level with the top of the wood. When recesses are found, it immediately tells you there is something wrong with the filler. This statement should not be interpreted that the original product of filler is wrong, for as a rule, when fillers leave the factory they are properly compounded. It is rather a case of application and amount of thinner employed, and this class of work is usually turned out in the last half hour before noon, and the last hour before the day's work is completed. Continual inspection will avoid many worries.

We make mention of these hours so as to bring to the reader's mind the care with which filling should be done.

Where oil stains are employed it is usually in order to gain time and on coarse grained woods, where the pores are exceptionally large the heavy application of oil stains carries with it the same possibility of danger from the fact that while the stain is apparently dry, yet in the deep pores it is only dry superficially, and the process of filling or finishing would seal in this unevaporated stain material, and again we have a source of trouble.

Certain veneers have been blamed for pin holes. This is wrong. They are not in the veneer, but in the pores of the veneer, most frequently in mahogany, traceable to the drum sanding machine, which packs the pores full of the sanding. This in turn holds the moisture of the stain and when sealed in with filler, shellac, and varnish causes a gas to generate in the pores which must escape thus causing eruptions and these eruptions are then recognized as pin holes. This is why it has been recommended to dust the work thoroughly, and on mahogany especially, we recommend the use of the picking brush.

In veneers, pin hole trouble can be laid to the glue, usually a case where the glue has been drawn up into the pores by the application of too much heat. These pin holes are in the glue, which has been drawn up and not in the veneer. Examine a piece of glue that has run over the edge. You will find it did not dry solid, but is full of minute pin holes, and when this is drawn up to the pores so that no sufficient filler can be applied to completely cover the holes, and if the filler is not sufficiently heavy to stay in these pores, during the cleaning and rubbing process, there you will find the cause for your pin holes manifesting themselves in the varnish coat. If glue is softened by the use of water stain it is usually a good grade of glue, and when it does soften it takes on sufficient water which is apt to cause difficulty by retaining this moisture under the surface. Air pockets that cannot be reached or filled up with the varnish coat, will cause pin holes. We say we apply shellac to bridge over any recesses. We also use substitute shellac for the same purposes, and recently we are using wood lacquers. If sanding is done on these materials, we are apt to cut through and the so-called bridging has been ruined.

The writer is of the opinion that while we have used shellac for years that a wash coat of shellac, put on so plentifully that it will run into all of the crevices before the filling, thoroughly done afterward, without sanding, then followed with varnish will give an ideal finish, one that will wear without checking or crazing.

In conclusion, we must recognize the pin holes are not caused by our materials, but they are the cause of the materials employed not being properly handled.

SHELLAC FINISH

WE WOULD not say the shellac finish as a complete finish is much used, nor should the present day shellac finish be taken to mean the old time French polish. The filler coat being ready to receive its final finishing, the next step would be to decide whether orange shellac or the bleached white shellac is to be used. As a rule it is the white shellac, and there is virtually no difference between the methods, save the color that would be obtained, we will give the directions for producing a good shellac finish with white shellac.

The first coat should be rather thin. There is much to be said about the thinning of shellac. Many directions merely give the dilutions, entirely ignoring the pound cut. Naturally it follows the reader will want to know what is meant by "pound cut." This refers to the number of pounds of gum that are cut to the gallon of alcohol. Thus, it will be seen that if the directions should read "to reduce a gallon of shellac with an equal quantity of alcohol"—there would be a vast difference in the gum content whether the gallon of shellac was a three, four or five pound cut. The average of high grade shellac is a four pound cut.

For our first coat in the preparation of the shellac finish a four pound cut shellac can be reduced with an equal quantity of alcohol. When this is thoroughly mixed, apply it to the filler coat, laying it off so as not to froth it, which means cross stroking and working it until small bubbles are in evidence. This is dangerous because when it is sanded the bubbles are cut off, leaving the filler coat exposed. Having applied our first coat of shellac, sanded lightly with No. 0000 sandpaper and dusted off, then apply two coats of regular shellac, but be sure to allow twenty-four hours between the coats. The great trouble in finishing shellac is that the artisan knowing that it dries quickly, is apt to follow a second coat before the first coat is bone dry. When the final coat is dry, it should be oil rubbed.

Sprinkle No. FFF pumice stone powder sparingly over the work, and from a convenient oil can drop some light rubbing oil over the surface, then with a felt pad rub with the grain until the sheen has been broken, and the matt surface, absolutely smooth, is presented. A shellac oil rubbed finish is very durable, but should it be cut through by too much pressure in the rubbing, do not attempt to recoat until all of the oil has been removed.

In a varnish finish a rag or waste moistened with alcohol is used to wipe up the excess oil, but this is not good in a shellac finish. Therefore, clear off the oil that is wiped up with a rag moistened with naphtha which will not affect the shellac, and if there is recoating to be done, continue this until you are certain that all the oil is removed, and then wipe off clean with fresh waste, and recoat.

A shellac finish is easily kept in condition, it does not withstand the wear as well as other finishes, is easily repaired, and polishes that contain some oil are to be recommended for dusting and cleaning.

To know how to make a good shellac finish often comes in handy for the small shop, the repair man, and has many times saved manufacturers of showcases and interior trim, where contracts were made against time. For the process after all is not as lengthy as varnish, it presents just as good an appearance as many varnish finishes of the day, and owing to the fact that many hours can be saved, that no drying equipment is necessary, that overnight drying in a warm room will suffice, makes possible the turning out of good jobs quickly.

FRENCH POLISHING

THIS method of polishing or finishing followed the oil or waxed polishes, before the introduction by the French of a shellac polish from which it obtained its name. It was introduced in England some eighty years ago, and was more or less a secret. It became an art, and up to this day in certain localities it is still in vogue.

The following original receipt first invented has been extracted from a French work, the Dictionnaire Technologique, not, however, for its usefulness (it having gone into disuse many years ago), but as a matter of curiosity:

French Polish

Gum sandarach .....	14 oz. 2 dr.
Gum mastic in drops.....	17 oz. 2 dr.
Shellac (the yellower the better) .....	14 oz. 2 dr.
Alcohol of 0.8295 sp. gr.....	3 qts. 1 pt.

"Pound the resinous gums, and effect their solution by continued agitation, without the aid of heat; if the woods are porous, add seven ounces one drachm of Venice turpentine. If an equal weight of ground glass be added, the solution is more quickly made, and is also otherwise benefitted by it. Before using, the wood should be made to imbibe a little linseed oil, the excess of which should be removed by an old flannel."

Numerous experiments were made in the manufacture of polishes, several chemists devoted their attention to its manufacture, and an improved polish was soon produced which was used for a number of years. The following are its proportions:

Shellac .....	14 ounces
Benzoin .....	¼ ounce
Sandarach .....	¼ ounce
White rosin .....	¼ ounce
Gum thus .....	¼ ounce
Grain alcohol .....	½ gallon

For those who prefer to make their own, the following will be found an excellent recipe:

Orange shellac .....	12 ounces
Benzoin .....	1 ounce
Sandarach .....	1 ounce
Methylated spirits .....	½ gallon

Pound the gums well before mixing with the spirit, as this will hasten their dissolution. White polish for white wood and marquetry work should be made with bleached shellac instead of the above. In making polishes or varnishes, the mixture will frequently require shaking until dissolved.

Shellac the market affords it, comes under the specifications of the number of pounds cut to the gallon of alcohol, such as two, three or four pound cut. It always must be remembered that this does not mean that a gallon of shellac contains that number of pounds of gum, as the addition of the gum to a gallon of shellac materially increases the entire bulk. It is evident therefore, that the better gums are those that completely dissolve in the alcohol, and that it is easy therefore to determine adulterants such as are used to increase the weight of the gum and correspondingly decrease the gum used. Lately there has appeared a popular adulterant powdered soap stone, which however is readily detected.

Where one is suspicious as to this adulterant, they can satisfy themselves by taking a small quantity of the sample and filter it through paper. It will then be found that a clear liquid will pass through, and in the filter paper will be brownish residue. Wash this with pure alcohol, which will take out most of the remaining gum. If a white powder appears, which is insoluble, it will be found to be an adulterant, and if soap stone or similar material, it will readily be recognized. If perchance the washing solution has passed through clear, rub it between the fingers and if rosin is suspected, it can readily be recognized, whereas the alcohol evaporates, the odor of rosin is recognized.

A practical test, and which will only satisfy the one who is familiar with rosin in general, and shellac gums in general, would be to evaporate the filtrate under examination to dryness, and then crush it to a powder under the knife. The rosin will powder up to a whitish yellow, whereas the shellac gum will also powder, but take on many more particles and still maintain much of its original similarity merely being broken up finer. There are many chemical tests which are absolutely definite but are beyond practicability for the ordinary finisher.

Milky shellac is oft times due to the fact that the bleaching agents are not entirely removed, and also is this due to the fact that freshly cut shellac has been exposed to moisture. For example, if a shellac is cut and allowed to stand around on a rainy or gloomy day, the alcohol will absorb more water than it should, and the results are that the spreading of the shellac will show milky streaks. This can often be overcome by brushing on clear alcohol, but if this milky streak is due to the acidity caused from the bleaching process, it can readily be detected by testing it with blue litmus paper which in that case turns red. A defective piece is better returned to the manufacturer, and where shellac comes under suspicion, its use be immediately discarded, a sample sent to the source of supply, and allow them to do the worrying.

A wax finish its name implies, means a coating of wax. It is always done over shellac or wood lacquer, sometimes over a surface that has been repeatedly oiled with hot linseed oil, and oil allowed to thoroughly dry before the wax is applied. The main constituent of a finishing wax is beeswax, carnauba and turpentine. Sundry other waxes are used in connection with these. A good wax finish depends upon not the quantity of wax applied but the thoroughness with which the coat is spread over the work, and the amount of rubbing that it receives in order to bring it to a hard surface by friction.

ENAMEL

AS IN all finishes, the surface in the white should be a good job, but in enamel finishes this is not always the case. Therefore, the primer coat is applied heavily and sanded to surface. Enamel finishes are usually applied with a spray, but, in some small work the brush is resorted to. However, enamels of the later type, known as lacquer enamels, are applied only with the spray. In the former, the usual procedure is one coat of primer sand, and then apply two coats of enamel. When thoroughly dry, rub them flat. The decorative schemes depend entirely upon the sort of work that is being enameled, and hand decorations, transfers, or stencil work comprise the methods. Two-tone decorations, such as mouldings of a different shade are popular. Gold backgrounds, by employing lining bronzes, together with high lighting effect, might be said to make up the entire category of decorative schemes employed in the enameling process as applied to furniture.

ENAMEL FINISHES FOR REED AND FIBRE FURNITURE

BOTH reed and fibre furniture finished in enamels is enjoying considerable popularity at this time. Some of the more common finishes used are white, ivory, gray, black, brown, old ivory, frosted brown, grey and green, grey and black. Of these, the old ivory finish is perhaps the most popular, although the frosted brown is also in high favor.

The colors and color combination possibilities of enamel finishes are endless, those mentioned above being the ones that appear to be more or less standard. The two-tone finishes are particularly attractive, and are very easily produced on account of the facility with which articles made of reed or fibre lend themselves to smutting. By this we mean that the article being finished is first enameled, and then coated with a smut color which is wiped off, the high lights restoring them to practically the original color of the enamel, while the low lights gradually shade off to the smut color in the depths.

The standard method of finishing reed furniture appears to be as follows: First, the article is sprayed or brushed with one or two coats (usually one) of flat white. Then two coats of enamel are applied, either by spraying or brushing. Spirit enamel is usually used, as it dries faster and is generally more satisfactory than oil enamel. After the enamel is thoroughly dry, the smutting or wiping color, usually oil colors cut with turpentine, is applied and allowed to become partially dry, after which the high lights are wiped out with a cloth wet with turpentine. This operation requires some dexterity on the part of the finisher, the result from an artistic standpoint depends on his bringing out the most pleasing contrast between the colors with which he is working. If plain enamel finishes are desired, the smutting operation is of course omitted.

The standard smut finishes previously mentioned are produced, using colors as follows: OLD IVORY—White or ivory enamel, smutted with raw sienna, ground in oil, and cut with turpentine.

FROSTED BROWN—Dark brown enamel, smutted with zinc white, ground in oil, and cut with turpentine.

GRAY AND GREEN—Light grey enamel, smutted with light green, ground in oil, and cut with turpentine.

GRAY AND BLACK—Light grey enamel, smutted with drop black, ground in oil, and cut with turpentine.

The frosted brown is sometimes produced by staining the reed with a dark brown water stain, and then applying a coat of shellac or shellac substitute, followed by two coats of varnish. The smutting is then done in the usual way.

Fibre furniture is finished as follows: The articles are first dipped in a glue dip, made by dissolving two pounds of glue in each gallon of water used. The glue serves the purpose of filling the fibre, and stiffens it to a paint, where it compares favorably with reed.

After the glue coating has hardened thoroughly, the enamel is applied, and the smutting done as in finishing reed furniture. Where it is desired to produce the brown or frosted brown finish by water staining, the staining is done before the glue dip is applied.

The enamel finishes just discussed have their good points, the only objections against them being the time involved in producing them, and their durability. The flat white and enamels of course, require several hours between coats, and at least twenty-four hours must elapse after applying the last coat of enamel before the smut can be safely applied. The finish is not water-proof, and becomes rather brittle with age. It also chips easily, hence the furniture will not stand much hard usage or outdoor exposure. This should be a drawback, as a great deal of the reed furniture sold is purchased for use as porch furniture, and is subjected to hard knocks that ordinary furniture does not receive.

Lacquer enamels have been tried out in several instances, and it is found that they provide a finish that is superior in every way to the spirit and oil enamel finishes. They dry much faster, it being possible to completely finish and ship the same day any piece of reed furniture. A coat of lacquer enamel will dry dust free in ten minutes, and if necessary to work so rapidly, coats can be applied an hour apart. They give a water-proof and oil proof finish, which is hard, tough and durable. The finish does not chip readily and stands exposure to weather extremely well. Any article finished with lacquer enamel can be easily cleaned by washing with soap and water improves, rather than injures the finish.

In finishing reed furniture with lacquer enamels, the priming coat of flat white is eliminated, and the finishing operations are started by applying a coat of lacquer enamel. This is allowed to dry for an hour or two, and a second coat applied. For most work two coats are sufficient, although in some cases it is necessary to apply three coats. The final coat is allowed to dry for three or more hours and then the smutting is done in the usual way, using colors, ground in oil and cut with turpentine.

The enamels are particularly adapted for this work as turpentine will not soften them in the slightest. The finish can be improved somewhat, by applying a coat of clear lacquer after the smutting is done. Lacquer and lacquer enamels are always sprayed, they dry too rapidly to permit brushing. This though is not an objectionable feature, as the spray method has been adopted by most manufacturers being more economical in the matter of time and labor than the brush method. It is also possible to secure better results, as well as a greater variety of finishes by spraying than can possibly be obtained by brushing.

Fibre furniture is finished in lacquer enamels in the same manner reed furniture is finished starting the finishing process after the glue dip has been applied, and is thoroughly dry.

Basket work of all kinds can also be finished to excellent advantage, using lacquer enamels. The finishing process is essentially the same as that employed in finishing reed furniture, although the smut finish is not so much in evidence, solid color work decorated by hand with artist's paints, being the finish in greater favor. The possibilities here are endless, the enamels can be had in any standard shade or tint. Bronze powder finishes in silver or gold are also very popular as basketry finishes. In producing these, fine lining bronze powders are mixed with clear lacquer or bronzing liquid, and the mixture applied to the work by spraying. As a rule only one coat of bronze powder is applied, the reed being first covered with a coat of water glass or glue.

INJURIES TO ENAMELS

WHEN an injury occurs to a piece of enamel furniture, it presents what appears to the furniture dealer, a difficult problem to handle. To attempt to match a color is almost useless. This is not saying it cannot be done, but it's not within the furniture dealer's province to attempt it. These injuries are usually small, and it is recommended to write to the manufacturer, and have him send on a bit of the colors which the number of the piece will designate.

If the injury is deep and small, drop from the point of a pointed stick, a bit of enamel and let it dry for forty-eight hours. Then, repeat the operation until the entire crevice is filled. If a bit of care be taken, this can be done in such a manner that when it dries out a practically level surface is obtained, but it must be remembered a certain percentage of evaporation takes place, and therefore the wet liquid should be just about the level of the finish. Let this dry for three or four days, don't attempt to do anything with it, and then, when it is good and hard, cut it to a level with a flat piece of sand paper and then rub the entire spot, following the same grain or lines with which the piece was originally rubbed. On a fine job, surround the spot by pasting around it a tissue paper as thin as cigaret paper, using a water soluble paste. Let it dry, and then cut off the excess with sand paper, so that the final strokes begin to take off the paper, then the rubbing of the piece will do the leveling, and if carefully done the spot will never show. On curved parts, don't forget the way your shoes are polished. Use the same scheme for polishing or rubbing down an injury. Here water and pumice stone can be resorted to. It is always safer, however, to use pumice stone and oil.

FUMING

THE process of fuming is as old as the hills. It dates back to the centuries when an entire suite would be made out of the wood of one tree. This was cut into boards and these boards covered with manure, so that the ammoniacal fumes would act upon the tannin naturally present in the wood employed for this purpose. In those days men had time to await results, and would have a stock of such wood undergoing the fuming process continually. Not only would this wood be moistened when taken from its bed, but it was found that the process would continue during the time required for proper drying. In fact, the drying process was sometimes termed the "ripening process," which was the bringing out of the color sought for.

Today the fuming process is accomplished in twenty-four hours, by subjecting the wood to the fumes of ammonia, in what is known as the fuming box. This is an air-tight compartment, spacious enough to take care of a factory output, the entire chamber being permeated with ammonia gas obtained by two methods. The one, depending upon the liberation of the gas from the ammonia water by allowing it to trickle over a series of pans, into a container below. The other, by taking the compressed gas and allowing it to escape slowly into the chamber.

The process is watched by means of a glass fronted compartment, through which can be seen a sample board, and which can be removed and tested for the color. The color is brought out when shellac or oil is applied.

In the present day, when so much veneer is used, one may wonder how any depth of color at all can be obtained on a piece of wood as thin as veneer. It is well known that it is the tannin present, which gives the color. Therefore, the modern way is to supply the tannin, which would be naturally short in the veneer portions, by applying a solution of tannic acid of known strength to the wood, the color is controlled by the length of time that it is subjected to the ammonia gas.

Some have sought to improve upon this method, and not without merit. Pyrogallol acid has been added to the solution applied to veneers, and the formula usually used, is one ounce of tannic acid, and one-half ounce of pyrogallol to the gallon of water. When this is subjected to the fuming process, wonderful results can be obtained.

The application of a solution of this nature, allowed to dry, and then followed with an application of ammonia, will produce good fuming effects, but is not much used owing to the objectionable odor of ammonia. Still in conjunction with bichromate of potash and sulphate of copper made as follows, wonderful results have been obtained.

Dissolve the copper in water, four ounces to the gallon, add to this solution ammonia water until the precipitate formed re-dissolves. Then add to this, twenty-five percent in volume of a bichromate solution, made by dissolving two ounces to a gallon of water. This solution when applied over a solution of tannic and pyrogallol acid, makes possible any shade of fumed oak that may be desired, but in the production of fumed oak in this manner, it must be remembered that it is not the time, but rather the strength of the solution that controls the shade obtained.

While the fuming process is generally applied only to oak, other woods will lend themselves more or less to the fuming process, directly in proportion to the amount of tannic acid present.

We say tannic acid, meaning the various components of wood that assist in producing a color change when subjected to alkaline fumes or alkaline solutions, and lest we forget, in the formula above part of the alkalinity can be supplied by the use of caustic soda or caustic potash and a corresponding diminishing of ammonia water. But no satisfactory results can be obtained without the use of ammonia. There seems to be a certain place where fixed alkalies alone produce only a yellowish brown, and the ammonia produces a brown of typical fumed oak.

After the fuming process come the protecting coats. These are usually the shellac and wax, but the application of a coat of thin boiled oil, one part oil, and three parts of naphtha, brings out the color, and in fact, seems to give greater depth to the finish than the application of shellac alone. It is necessary to allow the oil coat to stand at least twenty-four hours and if any grease spots remain, that they be wiped off, and the surface be uniform.

Fumed oak can be obtained by stain coats only, but these do not penetrate the wood to the extent that the fuming process does, and consequently with their scarce finish, wear off at the edges and show the white wood, which is not the case with a thoroughly fumed job.

In cases of overlay work, wonderful results can be obtained by giving the overlay a strong solution of acids, above referred to, and then fuming the entire piece. The results will be that the overlay is much darker, and thus not only do you get a fumed oak finish, but also the duotone effects, with very little extra work.

POLYCHROME

POLYCHROME has a real intrinsic beauty. No harsh colors are to be seen, and such is the ideal to strive for in producing polychrome.

Plain surfaces are not adapted to polychroming, and therefore, any piece abounding in turnings, carvings, or flutings is ideal. The fluted columns of the ancients with their many elaborate carvings, were often painted in various colors, which the centuries of storms and sunshine have dimmed until they are visible to us today only through what appears to be a dusty film.

DIRECTIONS FOR POLYCHROMING

THE first step is to shellac the entire article. This shellac coat dries in a very short time. Next apply the base coat which may be gold, a colored bronze, enamel or oil colors.

If gold, mix the gold bronze powder with shellac, and apply to the piece. The coloring of any piece is entirely up to the individual, depending upon the color scheme and effect desired.

A number of colors may be employed in the base coat on an article, depending upon the designs.

After these colors are dry, to produce the "aged" or "dusty" effect, paint the entire article with either the light or dark smutting solution, depending upon the tone of shading desired. Let this dry for a few minutes and then with a soft cloth, "high light" the work, that is, wipe off the smutting solution, allowing the base color on the high parts to show through, permitting what will, to cling to the depression and carvings, so that when dry it will give the dusty appearance. The latter so-called aging or smutting may be omitted, retaining the brilliancy of the colors only.

Lamp bases and plain candles may be "stippled." This is very effective on plain surfaces. After shellacing an article, apply the "stipple paste" rather thick depending on how fine or coarse a stipple one desires. With a brush, the paste may be formed in various waves and ripples. Allow this to dry thoroughly, which may take several hours. When dry, finish with colors as above.

The beauty of polychrome or bronze finishes lies in the fact that it permits the carrying out of individual ideas and taste. These directions are general, and can be applied to any material, wood or composition, or used on furniture, the major portion showing the natural wood, polychrome being used only in a decorative way.

DUOTONE FINISHES

A DUOTONE finish is one wherein there is a strict harmony between the two shades that are used in finishing furniture, usually of a design that lends itself to this style of finish. They are built upon the standard shades in vogue, such as Standard Brown Mahogany, and Standard American Walnut, using this shade and varying it in another tone. But in order to be correct, one part of the finish should represent the Standard shade. We presume that everyone connected with the industry understands what is meant by "Standard Shade" or "Standard Finish." It is the shade of any particular finish that has been universally adopted by manufacturers so as to permit the dealer to interchange pieces of various makes and still have them match. Thus is brought out the idea that the duotone should in one of its shades be a correct Standard.

When this style was first adopted, the lines of demarcation of the two tones were made with an awl, from which it received at first the name "scratch line finish." But to work stains up to and not over this line was difficult, and now they are larger and made by machines commonly known as routing machines. These machines permit the making of these so-called scratch lines very well defined of uniform depth, usually about 3/16 inch in width, a great boon to the finisher whose duty it is not to allow the dark stain to go over the lighter wood.

The designers of furniture usually indicate their preferences as to what and where the lighter and darker shades are to appear, and in some cases have the darker or lighter shades appear on what they call the "overlay veneer." In other cases the line of demarcation is a black strip of moulding in place of the scratch line, in which case the moulding is usually dyed before being put into place. In rare cases this line is produced with a jet black dye on to the work, but this is best done on enameled work where it resolves itself to nothing more than striping. It is not successful as a staining proposition, and upon close inspection it will be noticed that the line is not true.

The following procedure will be found the most reliable in the production of duotones, and a few pertinent facts will suffice to assure the foreman finisher of a successful result.

Always use the same stain.

Don't attempt to make the light work the light finish by wiping or sanding.

Use the same filler.

In cases where the centers of panels are to be darker and they have been routed, reduce the regular stain to the shade that you have selected or that matches the sample you are working to. This is best done by producing some of the stained wood that is going through the factory, and by making several tests produce a formula for reduction. Right here it might be well to say that this is usually 50%, whether it is an oil stain or a water stain.

With this stain go over the entire work, and when dry, go over those parts that are to be darker, with the regular stain. It will be found that there is practically no difference in the darker parts than if it had been stained but once. The absorbing power of the wood seems to take care of this nicely. The main thing is to start with the regular stain, and not deviate from this rule by attempting to make two original stains. This procedure takes care of any style of duotone on tables, stands, and kindred pieces. There are sometimes border effects employed where the center is entirely light and the border dark. If perchance the border be a bevel, two coats of the light stain will be about right, owing to the end wood absorbing more color. There is no need of protecting the light colored wood because the scratch line is of sufficient prominence to safeguard over-lapping.

Where the black border mouldings are used, these can be stained with Nigrosene, but as said before, by dyeing them in boiling dye so that considerable penetration takes place. In that case the line of demarcation is stained up to with the second coat. When the moulding is applied it covers these, then if there is any sanding to be done the moulding having been dyed deeply, is not affected.

The overlay is used on all grades of furniture, and in many cases other woods of pretty figures are employed, such as curly birch, bird's eye maple, etc. In these cases the same procedure is followed as above, and being an overlay, the second coat or the dark effect is produced on the overlay. In many cases, in order to obviate the difficulty of staining the overlay, veneers are dyed before they are laid, and being of the darker shade, the staining around them with the lighter stain has no effect, still having the advantage of the overlay being dyed thru and thru, and of not showing any white edges.

The most ordinary piece "looks up" when stained light, and filled dark. The finishing process is one and the same, and the grade depends upon the class of work being turned out.

OVERLAY

THE growing tendency of furniture designers to use pretty figured woods in the shape of heavy veneer for overlay work is opening up a new field for many figured woods that have not been considered seriously in the manufacture of furniture.

Woods like myrtle wood, bird's-eye maple, curly birch, etc., lend themselves for this class of work, and when one stops to consider how this will help to bring out featured goods and at the same time make possible the employment of straight grained and plain woods, the entire proposition should be of vital interest to the producers of lumber, and at the same time the makers of furniture. The eye will always catch the pretty figure of the overlay, whereas the bulk of wood employed is of the cheaper grades, retaining the strength and the many advantages that are to be had by the employment of birch, maple or gum, in a general construction of the various pieces.

No difficulties are encountered in the production of any of the conventional colors of the day. The overlay work which is a heavy veneer, has, of course, had much more consideration and there are now being offered a new set of dye materials—calling them "boiling dyes"—from which it is possible to produce any of the various tones that may be desired to harmonize with the general color, tone and finish of the piece.

These are termed "boiling dyes" because in order to obtain the color desired through and through the piece, the veneer must be immersed in boiling hot dye and kept at a boiling point for some hours, depending of course upon the thickness of the veneer, because in overlay work it is absolutely essential that the veneer is one color through and through.

One feature of these dyes that will appeal to the finisher is the fact that they are all intermixable, so that he is able to produce the many half tones and delicate shades on wood, and again the fact that these shades penetrate the wood uniformly. When the dyeing process is complete, there is no fear of sanding through.

Suppose that our general piece of furniture is to be finished in brown mahogany, and a water stain is employed. The overlay has been dyed of such a tone as to harmonize when finished with the general piece. There is no necessity of cutting around the overlay. Let the stainer go over the entire work, brushing out well, and laying off the stain so as to avoid runs, particularly around the edges of the overlay. He will find, much to his surprise, that the dyed overlay is very little effected if at all, because the boiling process has so thoroughly penetrated the fibres that the simple process of staining has little or no effect, and if it does at all, the sanding will take it off immediately.

When it comes to the filling, care should be taken that the filler matches the tone of the overlay. In most cases, however, very little filling is necessary, and the same filler that is employed on the general piece can be used on the overlay.

A precaution well to note is that after the overlay has been dyed, it should be thoroughly dried before it is laid. Some may think that as long as it is going to be glued down again it does not matter whether or not it is thoroughly dried before doing so. This of course, is an error for several reasons. First, that after boiling—depending upon the drying process—the overlay veneer is apt to contract more than in its natural state. Again, if it is glued down before it is thoroughly dried this contraction may cause fissures, and then give trouble in the finishing room. The gluing process does not effect it in that way.

Every foreman finisher can do his own dyeing. The process is simple and can be easily tested out in a small way, by providing himself with a suitable dish that will hold several pieces of overlay veneer. There are two points requisite. One is, the strength of the dye, and the next one, to know how long the wood must be immersed, so as to be certain that the color has completely penetrated. Therefore for an experiment let him take and make a dye solution of known strength, and then, when it is hot, immerse the veneer and keep it almost at a boiling point. Then, after it has been there for an hour or two, cut it in two and see if the color has gone through the wood, always remembering that the farther the dye has penetrated, the slower the process to complete penetration. Should the dye have penetrated half an hour, it will probably take two more to complete the penetration. Another factor that he must consider is the replacement of the liquid as evaporation takes place. After he is sufficiently familiar with the idea, he can make a vat out of wood, and mix his color cold, and run a steam jet in the vat, with the control so that he can keep the water hot.

A very handy way to do this is to hang the veneers edgewise into the tank, holding them with little wooden clothes-pins. These pins are very similar to a paper clip, and are provided with a little hook that can be hooked over a wire. These wires in turn, stretched over a frame that covers the tank, so that when you lift up the frame, the entire lot of veneer comes out of the vat and this frame with its cargo suspended where it can dry. He can have several of these frames, and the process will go on without his attention. The scheme will probably supply the evaporation.

If there is trouble in holding the veneers edgewise, a wooden rake with the teeth sticking upwards, may be fastened to the bottom of the vat, which tends to keep the veneers separate while they are at first immersed, thus avoiding the tendency of their floating sideways, and thus coming into contact with each other and retarding the penetration.

There is a great variety of lacquer work in China and Japan, with almost as many qualities as there are varieties. China and Japan both claim priority in the art of lacquering. Japan has brought the art to its highest development in every way, although some samples of China lacquer equals that of Japan for commercial shipments.

The exact process of preparing lacquer not only differs as between China and Japan, but differs in the nature of each piece of work, the article made, the color and quantity. In general, the basis of all lacquering is a varnish obtained from the resinous juice of the rhus vernicifera or "uruso-no-ki," "urushi" or "varnish tree," cultivated in many parts of China and Japan for the purpose. This tree in many respects resembles an ash. It grows to a height of from 15 to 80 feet, and the gum obtained, by making incisions in the bark of the tree near its base, before daylight during the months of July and August, and catching the sap, which exudes as a milky product.

This sap is placed in tubs or similar vessels, which are set in the sun to evaporate all moisture. It separates into a clear almost colorless resinous liquid, which rises to the top and into a thicker, more resinous and darker liquid mass, which settles to the bottom. The qualities are then separated by decanting the top, representing the finer grades and the bottom the lowest grades used for ordinary paints, "Ningpo varnish."

This liquid in its various qualities is the basis of all lacquering, and variations in treatment begin with the various ways and degrees of refining of the liquid. The liquid is separated into grades by minute degrees for fine work.

It is colored various shades in various ways. For example, in China black is obtained by stirring the liquid in the air until it thickens somewhat, and then mixing with it a stain obtained by mixing gall-nuts and iron. Other shades involve the use of ox blood, sulphate of iron, vermilion, tea oil and other substances.

In China, the liquid is thinned for use by the addition of vernicia montana, Camellia oleifera, sulphate of iron, rice and vinegar, and sometimes wood oil. The use of each of these substances represents some especial need, difference in quality or condition, or especial object in view, and is not altogether a matter of convenience at the time. The lacquer is poisonous until dry.

Usually the wood to be lacquered is soft, dry pine. The surface and corners are made absolutely smooth, joints are stopped by oakum, paper pulp or strips of grass cloth. Paper is pasted over rough joints to make all smooth for the varnish. Emery powder is then used for a coat on the piece, sometimes vermilion or gamboge being used. After drying, the whole is ground down by pumice stone, powdered sandstone or powdered deer horn. The same preparation is again applied and ground down again. Then the lacquer is evenly applied with a broad soft brush, and in a room free from breezes and dust, and with a minimum of light. In fact a dark, damp room is the best lacquer finishing room. After the varnish dries, the piece is ground down and polished. The same process is then repeated, the minimum number of coats being three, while often as many as 16 are applied.

For cold colors, this alternate varnishing and polishing constitutes the finish. Various decorations are applied in different ways. In mother of pearl inlay work, for example, the mother of pearl is cut in the desired figures in thin shell, and the pieces are placed in position on the undried surface soon after the application of one of the early coats of varnish and are then varnished over, polished as the rest of the surface, revarnished, and so on, becoming imbedded in the enamel and polished and repolished as a part of it. Lacquer is mixed with various substances and raised figures are made and applied to the surface in the same way and are ground and revarnished in the same way for relief work. The process is the same with various works, for articles of the most intricate design. In general, the difference in qualities of lacquer work, therefore, depends first upon the high refinement of the lacquer, and the manner of its early treatment which in the old processes often represented the work of many men for an incredible time most of which finer processes are impossible in countries without labor of extraordinary cheapness and skill, and secondly, on the care and skill with which the articles lacquered are prepared, and the care and skill with which the lacquer is applied and decorations are made.

HINTS FOR FURNITURE DEALERS

SCRATCHES, bruises, injuries to which furniture is prone, notwithstanding the extreme care exercised by manufacturers in shipping, present a problem to the retailer. It is expensive to ship goods back, say nothing of the delay, and therefore he is confronted with the problem of how to repair the injury, so that it will not only be saleable, but practically unnoticeable.

There have been many schemes recommended, but most of them are based upon equipment, such as one would find in a factory. The inquiries that we receive come mostly from outlying centers, miles away from any source of finishing materials, and for this reason, we are going to recommend the simplest possible methods for repairing the various kinds of injuries.

It would be a good investment for any store to supply itself with one of the many so-called "repair outfits" that are on the market. As a rule these contain the necessary colors soluble in alcohol, these enabling them to color shellac. Often they contain besides shellac, a French polishing solution and the necessary tools.

The most common injury is a nail scratch, caused from some unsuspected nail protruding in the shipping case, so that when the furniture is removed a scratch is made, that many times goes through the finish into the wood. In cases of this kind, the first thing to do is to carefully remove the protruding slivers, so that no loose wood is at hand. There is a very good reason for this, which is as follows:

These little slivers, when the scratch is stained, become saturated with the dye or stain, and thus present a much darker color than would the smooth surface, and this too must be taken into consideration when staining the scratch, as there is no way of smoothing the wood, and therefore, a much lighter shade of stain should be used, and the matching of color produced by the several coats.

For those who have no "repair outfit," it is recommended that they obtain from a wood finishing house, four one-ounce bottles, representing the following colors: spirit black, orange, yellow and bismark brown.

There are two styles of finishes today, that represent 95% of all of the colors on the market, namely: brown mahogany and American walnut. It is presumed, that white shellac is obtainable in the home market. The shade that we wish to produce to repair mahogany or walnut, is brown, and it is recommended to proceed as follows:

Take a quantity of each color, equal to a heaping teaspoonful, and dissolve this in four ounces of denatured alcohol, and thus you will have four spirit solutions, representing yellow, black, orange and bismark brown. The bismark brown, when dissolved in spirits, is a deep rich red. With it, and black, almost any shade of mahogany can be matched. A rich brown is produced by adding black to the orange. If there is a streak of red in your brown, add a bit of bismark. Thus it will be seen that practically any furniture shade can be made by the intermixture of these colors in the varying quantities.

An easy way to do this matching is by the use of little strips of blotting paper, clean pieces of which are repeatedly dipped into the various mixtures, until the shade desired is obtained. When it is arrived at, add an equal quantity of white shellac to the color mixture, and stir it up thoroughly. Then, with a dainty brush, apply very lightly to the scratch, following our previous suggestion, that the color be a trifle lighter than that of the injured piece. Then continue to apply the shellac, until the injury is brought up to a level. From here on, care must be taken not to over-step the building process, and if it be a varnish or a shellac finish, it can be leveled off by a polishing method, much like that of the French polishing.

Take that part of the injured piece, and cover quite a space with shellac, not the colored shellac, but rather thin white shellac. If the surface be a dull rub surface, notice the way the stroke of the original finish ran, and with very fine pumice stone and oil, rub in the same direction. If it is an extremely dull finish, use a coarser pumice stone, and top off by rubbing lightly with moistened hands, and a bit of oil. This is to break the sheen and to make that part of the finish resemble the other.

On a table top that has had an injury of this kind, it is recommended to rub the entire top, so that they both present the newness of finish alike. This recommendation will not do at all for the later day finisher made of wood lacquer.

Wax finishes, open pore finishes, are colored in a similar manner, but care must be taken that the building process is broken to conform with the pore lines. The color material must be prepared with much less shellac. One can imagine what it would be to take a scratch, running across the grain, and fill it with shellac level to the surface. The scratch would show more in this manner, yet many find that it is quicker to do this, and then to work in the pores with a sharp screw driver, driving down the shellac, to conform with the other pores, so that the continuous line of filling is broken up with the intervening surface, built up as it was before the injury. When this is accomplished, it may be necessary to level off with some very fine sand paper, and then re-wax.

There is another suggestion that should be taken advantage of, and will save a good deal of worry. The factory that produced a certain piece knows just exactly what stain had been employed, and in this day of parcel post, would gladly mail enough stain to assist in repairing any injury, and oftentimes, these are accompanied with most valuable recommendations.

To repair a bump or an indenture, made by a dull instrument, or a jam, where two pieces have been in collision, but where the surface has not been broken, presents a problem that sometimes is solved in a most simple manner. The texture of the wood in a place of this kind is broken down, but can be made to respond to repeated applications of heat and cold. In a case of shellac finish, the temperature must not be greater than a hundred degrees F, varnish one hundred and twenty. Place a felt pad over the injury, and heat it with a hot flat iron. Allow this process to continue ten or fifteen minutes, then cool it by wrapping a piece of ice in a sufficient amount of cloth to chill the part, or, if a water bottle is at hand, fill this with crushed ice and cool the spot. The repeated and varying operations have a tendency to loosen the compressed fibres of the wood, and finally they will respond to the heat treatment. Should this be unsuccessful, and perchance the finish is injured, which however should not be the case if the process of the work is continually watched, it is better to take the finish off, and then steam the wood by putting on a wet cloth and heating it with a hot flat iron. This will replace the surface, which then can be repaired much like the recommendations for the scratch. There is one thing to remember in repair work. It cannot be done in a hurry, for, as a rule, hurried jobs turn out botchy.

WOOD LACQUER FINISHES

THESE are the latest type of wood finishes and differ in construction materially from all others.

When we asked a representative of the pioneer wood lacquer company for a definition, he gave us this:

"A scientifically prepared mixture of transparent solids and solvents, the former consisting of pyroxylin and gums dissolved in the latter which are a mixture of quick drying solvents so selected that the product will dry evenly and smoothly leaving a film, a homogenous, flexible, waterproof, non-crystalline, celluloid-like film to protect the surface."

The up and doing manufacturer of furniture has been conducting his experiments with the different offerings as they were brought out, and in each his suggestions have aided greatly in the rapid advancement of this material.

The retailer has followed, and now the general public has become interested.

We find the following claims made for wood lacquer from the furniture maker's point of view. That it will not print in shipping, is much harder and tougher than ordinary finishes, when rubbed dull it will remain dull, and dries dust free in fifteen minutes to half an hour.

For open pore, open grain, two tone finishes, etc., at least two coats can be applied in one day.

The user finds the following qualifications to his especial interest, that it is not affected by hot dishes, etc., is not affected by boiling or ice cold water, does not scratch white its transparency showing the grain of the wood.

Wood lacquer is a product that carries with it a good deal of convincing argument. We find in a semi-chemical journal the following paragraphs:

OXIDATION VS. EVAPORATION

Ordinary finishing materials are not stable. They dry by oxidation and this process alone keeps them chemically active for a long period. According to Dr. Henry A. Gardner, Institute of Paint & Varnish Research, linseed oil absorbs sixteen per cent of its weight in oxygen. When the unsaturated oils have almost completed their absorption of oxygen and have hardened during this process, disintegration begins. A chemist analyzing the material scraped from a newly finished article and from one on which the finish was old, would find a great variance between the two. Not only would the percentage of oil and oxygen vary, but the percentage of moisture would have increased or decreased in ratio to the penetrability of the finish.

It is the opinion of Dr. A. P. Laurie that varnishes do not attain their maximum hardness until twelve months after they are applied. In the interim they are subject to all the vicissitudes of the ordinary finishing materials. Even after they have reached maximum hardness they are still chemically active.

Printing is one of the commonest faults of ordinary finishing materials. Checking, cracking, crazing are generally due to the lack of elasticity in the oxidized materials. Failure to expand and contract with extremes of temperature is another cause of trouble to the manufacturer of furniture. In addition there is blistering, blotching, blooming, greening, flaking and a host of other difficulties.

Our personal laboratory experience has shown us many interesting features any of which are of interest to the finisher, the manufacturer and the dealer.

The successful production of a good finish with wood lacquer depends especially upon the care with which the wood is prepared, probably more so than with any other material. In the open pore finishes the beauty of this is marked, for the wood lacquer lays close, its film is thin, of great flexibility, and very tough. This sort of finish lends itself very nicely to a final wax coat.

The closed pore finish should be carefully filled and with filler free from lakes. Allow the filler twenty-four hours drying time; then coat with the intermediate recommended by the maker of the particular brand of wood lacquer used.

This finishing material must be understood as it has its peculiarities the same as all. The principal factors for successful use are intimate knowledge of the spray outfit used for its application, (it cannot be successfully applied with a brush) and no rule can be laid down for this as it is a working ratio of gun pressure, distance from work and the dilution of the wood lacquer. The system must be kept absolutely clean and free from oil and water. However, let it be said, always flow on a good plentiful coat (it will not sag), on tops especially, and rub same a varnish.

When rubbing employ only the highest grade of paraffine oil, one of low viscosity (thin) and clean off well. Do this with neutral soap such as that supplied by druggists known as "green soap" which looks like vaseline, and spread over the work with a rag. Wash off the little frothing. Again the oil film can be wiped off with a bit of wax thinned with turpentine.

A good wood lacquer does not sweat or bloom when oil rubbed and properly cleaned, but those artificially bodied up are apt to do so.

REPAIRING INJURIES TO WOOD LACQUER FINISHES

THE inquiries that we have received all due to accidents, and in each case, reported injury has gone into the wood. Wood lacquer finishes differ from all other finishes in application, which in production is done by spray only. From the foregoing article on repairs, in which we describe in detail how to stain the injured wood, all the information necessary for this part of the procedure can be taken. But, after the staining operation has been accomplished, a small scratch is best filled with white shellac, but if the injury covers considerable space, and it is desirable to repair with wood lacquer, the procedure is somewhat different.

In cases of this kind, the edge of the injury must be coated with two coats of heavy shellac. Do not worry about it extending over the edges. Then fill in the intervening space of the injury with a wood lacquer not diluted. This is best obtained

Statistics of the Industry

Showing progress of various branches of home furnishings production and comparisons with other classes of merchandise

By WARREN H. GARDNER

ANY attempt to secure a figure or group of figures which picture accurately the activities of the furniture industry in the United States is met with the question, what is furniture? In the pioneer days of this country, a bed, a table and chair were the only household articles which one could call furniture. Today, so many things are necessary to the comfort of every householder that the term furniture is now applied to innumerable pieces. Whatever commodities the furniture trade might include in this classification seems not to influence greatly the "official" classification of the Bureau of Census.

The reports of the Bureau of Census for the year 1919 show one item for furniture with a product valued at $571,356,333 manufactured by 3,154 establishments. The industry had a capital investment of $423,992,405 and purchased raw materials valued at $255,172,887. The largest item in raw materials was lumber. The industry consumed almost one billion and one-half square feet of lumber. The furniture industry ranks third in the use of lumber in the United States. Building construction and railroads are the other large users of lumber. For purposes of comparison of the furniture industry with other industries, Table I is submitted. It lists the important industries of the country according to the value of their products. Furniture industry is thirty-third in value of products and seventeenth in the number of wage earners employed. An examination of the industries which create a greater product will reveal the fact that sixteen of them manufacture food or textiles. These products are quickly consumed, require constant replacement and are used in greater quantities per person than is furniture. Hence, furniture, being a more stable and longer lived commodity, need not be manufactured in such vast quantities as food and clothing and other commodities shown on this table.

The classification by the Bureau of Census includes four important groups of furniture: wooden furniture, rattan and willow furniture, metal furniture and store and office fixtures. Under wooden furniture are listed the products of all factories making bed room, dining room, living room and kitchen furniture, office, school and church furniture. The value of wooden furniture manufactured in 1919 was $418,869,670, manufactured by 2,273 factories. The capital invested by these establishments was $310,690,365. They paid out in salaries and wages $131,222,234 and purchased materials (mostly lumber) valued at $186,168,070. The average wooden furniture factory has an investment of $136,682, makes a product valued at $185,000 and employs 53 persons. The industry, although concentrated in certain parts of the country, is conducted in forty-two states.

The average furniture store sells other commodities than wooden furniture. It endeavors to completely furnish the home. A complete cross-section point of view of the furniture industry must of necessity, then, include the more important articles of trade found in the furniture store. Table II. is the result of a thorough investigation into the industrial activity of the manufacturers of household furniture commodities. Original sources were used in every case: the Bureau of Census Reports for the years 1909 and 1919, and its report on Census of Manufactures, 1921, the Department of Commerce Reports, Department of Labor Reports, and the Department of Commerce Statistical Abstracts.

A detailed analysis of industries as a whole and of production statistics of each state was made. The chief difficulty encountered during the research was the inadequacy of the government reports. Figures on apparently unrelated industries were combined with furniture industries so that an accurate figure on furniture was hard to secure. Classifications of 1909 were different from those of 1919 and 1921 so that it was impossible to compare the different years. It was found necessary to make a detailed study only of those commodities which accurately could be taken from the reports and which were sold by the average furniture store. The result was the tabulation of eight commodities in addition to the three divisions of furniture manufacture. In Table II, the item "store and office fixtures" has purposely been omitted. Figures on that branch of the furniture industry should not be included with those on household furniture industries. The value of store and office fixtures in 1919 was $67,394,000. Such a large figure would materially alter the grand total of household furniture manufactured. The Census reports show an item "Carriages and Sled, children's" which was not included in the table because of inclusion of unrelated industries. Chinaware is sold by a goodly number of furniture stores but is also sold in greater quantities by other stores. These two items will be treated elsewhere in this discussion.

The combined summary of household furniture as listed in Table II. shows that there were 4,879 factories in 1919 and 4,245 factories in 1921 engaged in manufacturing household furniture commodities. The report of the Bureau of Census on Manufactures of 1921 is the latest information available. The Census of Manufactures of 1923 is not yet completed. In 1919 the combined factories employed 248,753 persons. Their total product was $926,828,608 and their capital investment reached $753,949,029. The establishments purchased raw materials of all kinds valued at $483,861,836. Their total pay roll was $280,100,530 against a national pay roll of over twelve billion dollars for all industries. The value of products in 1921 was lower than in 1919. This was due to the great industrial depression which swept over the entire country during 1920 and 1921, but the combined decrease was not as great as in many other industries.

The value of products manufactured in one year does not alone indicate the quantity available for distribution. Although imports and exports of furniture are not considerable they must be included with figures on national production and distribution. The following are the imports and exports of furniture in 1919 and 1921:

from the manufacturer of the furniture so that the same make of material is employed. We have tried several schemes of this filling in, and have found that it makes little difference whether the space is filled at once, by letting the lacquer run off the brush to the desired level, or whether repeated coats are given. In the former, there is apt to be a settling below the level, where in the latter one is liable to do too much brushing, and thus cut through the protecting wall shellac.

Let the work stand for twenty-four hours, then inspect carefully to get a fair idea of how much of the finishing material must be taken down in order to get an absolute smooth surface. Do not get the idea that this is an easy job. On the contrary, if you undertake to sand down the repair work, you are apt to get two depressions on each side of the filled-in portion. There has been many a scheme offered, and many ideas have been given of just how to do this, but theory is one thing and actually doing it is another. The first thing we have to put across is that a job of this kind, cannot be hurried. Here is a transparent ridge that we desire to level off to meet with the surface of the balance of the piece. It must be done without injury to any of the adjacent surface, for, in a case of that kind, it might have been better to take off the entire top and refinish. A very successful way is to take a freshly broken piece of glass, that has an absolutely square edge. This edge must be as keen as a shaving tool. If not at hand, take a safety razor blade, lay each hand flat on the surface, then, raising the two first fingers, hold the blade and draw it toward you over the ridge, taking off the minutest shaving at each stroke. Very soon the level will be approached. Then take the entire spot and coat it with very thin finishing wax. Rub this down to a polish, following the same strokes that were employed in rubbing the piece originally.

After this is done, inspect the work, and if a level has not been obtained, repeat the operation. In that way the surface will be built up without injury to the adjacent finish.

In a case of this kind, one will find that the treated part of the piece may be a bit more brilliant, and if it is so found, dilute the furniture wax with turpentine to a creamy consistency, and go over the entire top. Always bear in mind to let it set, and when about hardened, rub lengthwise with the grain in long, regular strokes. If the work is done in a painstaking way, it's a difficult matter to detect the scratch. Supposing, however, the scratch runs crosswise of the grain, and all the continuous fibre of the wood is entirely broken, this undoubtedly is the most difficult job to repair. If the piece is worthy of the time, proceed as follows: Get the general ground work colored, and then with a pigment that matches the flake part of the wood, draw fine lines connecting the two broken lines of wood fibre, so that the intervening space would show a continuous coloring, the way it did before it was injured. One requires fine camel's hair or sable brushes for this work. The pigment must be heavy, so that it remains just where put. Then, when the shellac is applied the entire ground work is protected. Don't do too much brushing or penciling. Do what you are required to do to get the effect, but do it daintily. The thing to avoid is a continuous dark streak running across the grain. If you had but one shade to contend with, it would be simple, but you have to match the shade of the filler, and the lightest part of the wood before a successful repair job can be done.

Adding imports to the combined total of $926,828,608 and deducting the net value of exports, we reach an amount, $919,453,795 which is the net value of wholesale furniture commodities available for distribution in the United States for the year 1919. In 1921, imports practically balanced exports, leaving a net amount $870,881,891 the value of furniture available in 1921.

Assuming that the average markup of furniture stores is 50%, the retail selling price of the combined household furniture production would have been $1,378,180,692 in 1919 and $1,806,322,836 in 1921. This is a close estimate of the business done by furniture stores throughout the country, for the commodities in this figure which are sold by other than furniture stores would be balanced by commodities from other industries which are not included in this figure, but are sold by furniture stores.

A study of furniture production by states reveals some interesting facts. A glance at Table III. will show what states predominate in each industry and those which are engaged in manufacturing all the household furniture products. Nine states, Illinois, Indiana, Massachusetts, Michigan, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin produced 81% of all wooden, rattan and willow furniture manufactured in 1919. Eighty-nine per cent of the capital was invested in these states, 1,717 or 71% of the factories are located within these states, and 80% of the persons engaged in the wooden, rattan and willow furniture industry work in the nine states. They purchased 80% of the raw materials. Metal furniture is manufactured mostly by Illinois, Ohio, Michigan, New York and Wisconsin, the value of whose products was 85% of the total.

Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York and Pennsylvania produced practically all the rugs and carpets in the United States in 1919. This does not include the manufacture of rag carpets which is a local industry; every community has its rag carpet works. Oil cloth and linoleum floor coverings were manufactured by 21 establishments of which 10 were in New Jersey and 5 in Pennsylvania. The production of these two states was $21,688,734 and $22,895,611 respectively, their combined production being 84% of the total.

The manufacture of mattresses and spring beds is the most widely distributed of all the groups of furniture under discussion. Forty-six states possess mattress and spring bed factories. Of these states, twenty-three each manufacture a product amounting to over one million dollars. The frequency of mattress factories is generally in proportion to the population of a community, although proximity to supply of raw materials was a factor in the location of 25% (225) of the establishments in the Southern states. In production of mattresses and spring beds, New York leads with 224 factories and a product valued at $13,472,513. Illinois has 72 factories and a product of $8,724,833; Texas, 86 factories, product $2,910,316; California, 49 factories, product $4,156,514, and Massachusetts, 52 factories with a product amounting to $4,015,343.

New Jersey, Ohio and West Virginia make 80% of the chinaware manufactured in the United States. Not more than ten states engage in the manufacture of this commodity. An interesting detail of china manufacturing is the relation of low cost of material to the finished product. The raw material (mostly clay) is only 21% of the cost of the finished product in contrast to 44% for wooden furniture, 50% for floor coverings, 50% for metal furniture, 38% for mirrors and picture frames, 58% for springs and mattresses, 34% for stoves and ranges and 45% for refrigerators.

Establishments manufacturing mirror and picture frames are concentrated in the states east of the Mississippi River and North of the Ohio River. Only 20 states make frames. Five states, California, Illinois, New York, Ohio and Pennsylvania produce 80% of the products of this group and claim 65% of the factories. Thirty states manufacture mirrors. The value of this product necessarily includes that of mirrors used in retail establishments, hotels and clubs. Illinois, New York, North Carolina, Ohio and Pennsylvania lead in the production of this group, making two-thirds of the output and claiming 101 or 55% of the factories.

The value of stove and range products is a considerable item in the total production figures for household furniture commodities. The Bureau of Census in 1919 reported thirty-five states manufacturing stoves, ranges, hot air furnaces, gas and oil stoves. The reports for the states which led in production segregated the different items of stove manufacture so that a comparison by states was possible. Four states, Illinois, Michigan, Ohio and Pennsylvania produced 52% of the stoves and ranges. Adding the products of Indiana, Massachusetts, Missouri, New Jersey and New York states, their combined output was over 75% of the total. Ohio stands by itself in the production of oil and gas stoves, making a product valued at $23,578,213 or 42% of the total for that commodity. The nearest state to Ohio is Michigan with a production of $7,497,180.

To summarize Table III, twelve states hold the first five positions in the production value of twelve household furniture commodities. New York leads in production of five commodities, wooden and rattan and willow furniture, metal furniture, carpets and rugs, mattresses and spring beds and mirrors. Illinois leads in two, mirror and picture frames, and stoves and ranges. Ohio leads in two, chinaware and gas and oil stoves. Massachusetts leads in children's carriages and sleds, Michigan in refrigerators and Pennsylvania in oil cloth and linoleum floor coverings. New York was second in production of frames and refrigerators, Pennsylvania in carpets and rugs and mirrors, Michigan in wood, rattan and willow furniture, and gas and oil stoves. New Jersey was second in oil cloth and linoleum and chinaware. Illinois was second in production of mattresses and spring beds, Indiana in children's carriages and sleds, Ohio in stoves and ranges and Wisconsin in metal furniture. Illinois and Michigan are each third in three commodities, Pennsylvania is third in two and New York, Massachusetts and Ohio and West Virginia are each third in one. New York and Ohio are fourth in three, Pennsylvania in two and Indiana, New Jersey and Missouri each fourth in one. Pennsylvania is fifth in four commodities, California, Illinois fifth in two and Indiana and North Carolina are fifth in one each.

A comparison of states by number of pieces produced would probably be a different story. The number of pieces in a city such as New York where the value per piece is much greater because of custom manufacture would be fewer than in other cities in which quantity production of medium and lower grade furniture is more important.

To secure a composite picture of the activities of all the states in the production of all household furniture commodities, Table No. IV. is presented. This table contains figures of unrelated commodities such as store and office fixtures and hot air furnaces in the states whose figures were not segregated. Although the great producing states stand out prominently in this type of a tabulation, there is an indication that the business of furnishing a modern home is becoming fairly well distributed throughout all the states. One can be fairly accurate in saying that the geographical center of household furniture production would not be far from the geographical center of population.

An effort was made to compare production by states over a period of years but unfortunately the commodities are not classified similarly in each census report. For instance, the Bureau of Census reported in 1909 one figure for furniture which included wood, rattan and willow furniture, metal furniture, store and office fixtures and refrigerators, giving a total of 3,155 factories and a capital investment of $227,886,506. In 1919 the Census reports show all of these commodities in separate divisions of furniture manufacture. Their combined total in 1919 was 3,276 factories (including 605 store and office fixture establishments) with a capital investment of $447,593,000, an increase of $220,000,000 over a period of ten years (see Table II.). Hence, the investment in 1919 was almost double that of 1909.

For purposes of comparison of growth of the principal producing states, the figures for the year 1919 are built up from the separate classifications of 1919 which were combined in 1909. Table No. V. reveals some startling percentages. The establishments in California increased from 129 in 1909 to 184 in 1919, or 42%. That state's capital investment increased from $3,061,691 to $9,048,554, a gain of over 185%. Its production increased from $4,496,067 to $14,141,140 or 214%, and the number of persons in the industry increased from 1978 to 3583 or 81%. Still greater expansion has taken place since 1919 along the Pacific Coast. Latest statistics from Los Angeles reported a product valued at $24,018,875 in 1923, which is greater than the entire state in 1919. This is in contrast to a product of $5,897,000 for that city in 1919. The state of Washington shows an increase of 24 factories or 66% over 1909 figures, an increase in output of 100% and an 80% increase in capital investment. The production of Oregon increased $2,088,435 or 191%.

*This table includes only products listed in Table No. II, with exception of figures of states in which store and office fixtures or hot air furnaces were not shown separately.

The number of furniture factories in the majority of states has decreased in the last ten years, although the number of workers has increased noticeably and the output and capital investment have more than doubled in many states. This reveals the movement to fewer but larger factories whose greater output is made possible only by the introduction of machinery and by the adoption of many labor and time saving devices.

The greatest gain in value of products was made by North Carolina, with an increase of 260% in value of products. Virginia led a close second followed by West Virginia, Kentucky, Connecticut and New Jersey.

The question may occur to many as to how the products of furniture manufacturing establishments are distributed to the consumer. There are several well-defined channels of marketing in the wooden household furniture industry which is composed of 2,273 factories with an average capital investment of $136,000 and an annual average output of $185,000. These averages are higher than some state averages which tends to prove that the product of a goodly number of factories is less than $185,000. Furthermore, there are quite a few manufacturers rated over a million dollars which would reduce the actual capital investment of many factories to less than $136,000. This means that many factories are not financially able to send a force of salesmen to sell their goods on the road. The best they can do is to spend their energies on manufacturing and to let some one else do the merchandising.

The factory that manufactures only has no trouble in finding an outlet for its goods. It can devote its entire establishment to the manufacture of articles specified by mail order houses who buy between 5 and 8% of the nation's manufactured furniture. Other factories are owned or their output is taken over by large department stores. In large cities like Chicago and New York there are many small firms who manufacture special furniture for private customers. The production of these firms will vary from $10,000 to $200,000 annually.

Manufacturer's representatives are increasing in number. Their presence is being noted more and more in the great jobbing centers of the country. This type of jobber, together with the full-fledged jobber who keeps a large stock on hand, is estimated to handle 15% to 20% of the country's production. The lower figure is closer than the latter. That the jobber is an important asset to the furniture merchants is revealed by a study of the large lists of customers of several of these concerns. The small dealer especially is treated with great consideration for his progress and welfare, and is given excellent service from the jobber's complete stocks. Treatment of this kind enables the jobber to grow with the increased business of satisfied customers.

The greater portion of the business of the country is handled by the manufacturer whose factory overhead includes salaries and commissions paid to a staff of salesmen who call

Code of Ethics and Principles of Business Conduct for the Furniture Industry

Formulated by Chamber of Commerce of the United States and Concurred in by National Furniture Conference at Chicago, Ill., July 9, 1924

THE function of business is to provide for the material needs of mankind, and to increase the wealth of the world and the value and happiness of life. In order to perform its function it must offer a sufficient opportunity for gain to compensate individuals who assume its risks, but the motives which lead individuals to engage in business are not to be confused with the function of business itself. When business enterprise is successfully carried on with constant and efficient endeavor to reduce the cost of production and distribution, to improve the quality of its products, and to give fair treatment to customers, capital, management, and labor, it renders public service of the highest value.

We believe the expression of principles drawn from these fundamental truths will furnish practical guides for the conduct of business as a whole and for each individual enterprise.

I. The foundation of business is confidence, which springs from integrity, fair dealing, efficient service, and mutual benefit.

II. The reward of business for service rendered is a fair profit plus a safe reserve, commensurate with risks involved and foresight exercised.

III. Equitable consideration is due in business alike to capital, management, employees, and the public.

IV. Knowledge—thorough and specific—and unceasing study of the facts and forces affecting a business enterprise are essential to a lasting individual success and to efficient service to the public.

V. Permanency and continuity of service are basic aims of business, that knowledge gained may be fully utilized, confidence established and efficiency increased.

VI. Obligations to itself and society prompt business unceasingly to strive toward continuity of operation, bettering conditions of employment, and increasing the efficiency and opportunities of individual employees.

VII. Contracts and undertakings, written or oral, are to be performed in letter and in spirit. Changed conditions do not justify their cancellation without mutual consent.

VIII. Representation of goods and services should be truthfully made and scrupulously fulfilled.

IX. Waste in any form,—of capital, labor, services, materials, or natural resources,—is intolerable and constant effort will be made toward its elimination.

X. Excesses of every nature,—inflation of credit, over-expansion, over-buying, over-stimulation of sales,—which create artificial conditions and produce crises and depressions are condemned.

XI. Unfair competition, embracing all acts characterized by bad faith, deception, fraud, or oppression, including commercial bribery, is wasteful, despicable, and a public wrong. Business will rely for its success on the excellence of its own service.

XII. Controversies will, where possible, be adjusted by voluntary agreement or impartial arbitration.

XIII. Corporate forms do not absolve from or alter the moral obligations of individuals. Responsibilities will be as courageously and conscientiously discharged by those acting in representative capacities as when acting for themselves.

XIV. Lawful co-operation among business men and in useful business organizations in support of these principles of business conduct is commended.

XV. Business should render restrictive legislation unnecessary through so conducting itself as to deserve and inspire public confidence.

I—TRUTH—

It shall be considered unethical to misrepresent the product of factories by manufacturers or wholesalers in the distribution to the dealers, or by the dealers in the distribution to the public by making false or ambiguous statements through print or otherwise.

II—RETURN OF MERCHANDISE—

It shall be considered unethical to make an arbitrary adjustment or settlement of differences not in accord with written or verbal agreement.

III—DISCOUNTS—

It shall be considered unethical to deduct cash discounts unless payment is made within discount time specified.

IV—CANCELLATIONS—

It shall be considered unethical on the part of the buyer or seller to cancel an order taken in good faith, without good and sufficient cause and only then by mutual consent. This shall also apply to HOLD ORDERS. The practice of hold orders should be discontinued.

V—GRATUITIES—

It shall be considered unethical for a manufacturer or wholesaler to give an employee of a retailer gratuity or commission for the advancement or sale of merchandise.

VI—EMPLOYEE SALES BY MANUFACTURERS—

It shall be considered unethical for a manufacturer or wholesaler to sell his merchandise to any excepting the furniture dealer or his own employees for personal use.

VII—WHOLESALE PRICES—

It shall be considered unethical for the manufacturer, wholesaler or dealer to disclose the wholesale price of furniture.

VIII—EXHIBITION ROOMS—

It shall be considered unethical for a dealer to request the admission of the consumer to an exhibition showroom or factory either by letter or introduction, card or personal accompaniment.

IX—EXCLUSIVE RIGHTS—

It shall be considered unethical for a manufacturer in any way to violate exclusive arrangements made with the dealer, and it shall be considered unethical on the part of the dealer to attempt to circumvent the exclusive arrangement by soliciting the assistance of other dealers outside of the affected territory, and it shall be considered unethical for the outside dealers to become a party to any such arrangement.

X—DONATIONS—

It shall be considered unethical for a retail dealer to solicit or request the manufacturers for donations or subscriptions to merchandise campaigns that are purely for the advancement of the dealer's personal interest.

XI—INVOICING—

It shall be considered unethical for a dealer to request of a manufacturer to furnish a false invoice covering any shipment of goods, or to furnish any blank invoices.

CODE INTERPRETATIONS

Return of Merchandise—Under this heading would be considered the arbitrary return of merchandise without the consent of the shipper. Merchandise should be held subject to the order of the shipper until such time as an adjustment of the matter is obtained.

Discounts—Care should be exercised by both buyer and seller that the discount terms are clearly and definitely stated at the time of purchase.

Statistics (Continued)

directly on the retail furniture dealer. It is estimated that 70% to 80% of the manufactured furniture is handled through this channel. This type of manufacturer is confronted with a huge task of marketing. There are about thirty-five thousand outlets for furniture in this country. Of these, between 20,000 and 23,000 are stores whose chief business is retailing wooden household furniture. They may or may not carry kindred lines but most of them have complete stocks of household furnishings. Ten thousand stores sell other lines besides wooden furniture, some specializing in floor coverings, others in hardware and stoves and still others in undertaking although this last combination is declining rapidly. Other stores have an upholstery establishment or mattress factory in connection with their furniture business while the new and second hand furniture dealers are not small in number.

Two phases of buying and selling furniture are developing side by side. Manufacturers are seeking new fields for their products and the dealers are seeking new lines for their stores. A logical and mutual arrangement for the consolidation of these movements is the recent growth of the great furniture marketing centers. The pioneer furniture market grew from the habits of a few progressive furniture buyers who personally visited the factories to select styles of furniture for their stores. The demand for furniture is more or less seasonal; hence, the visits of these buyers were seasonal. Manufacturers, becoming aware of the advantages of personal contact with furniture buyers, began urging other buyers to visit their factories, later on, the manufacturers co-operated in advertising their community as a market center and thus the markets were developed.

Recent years have seen a strong effort to bring the buyer to market and these efforts have not been in vain. Attendance in some of the markets doubled in a few years' time. Markets are being developed in many centers throughout the country. Great exhibition buildings are now filled with exhibits of manufacturers, numbering from one hundred to six hundred and fifty. Markets are now held periodically in Chicago, Grand Rapids, Jamestown, New York, High Point, St. Louis, Rockford, Ill., Evansville and Shelbyville, Ind., Minneapolis, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Portland, Oregon. A close check on the attendance at the markets over a period of years, reveals the fact that many retail furniture men are not regular visitors at these markets. It is a safe estimate to say that less than ten thousand stores of the country have visited the furniture markets in the last five years and of these about ten per cent visited the markets every consecutive season. Consequently, there is a great amount of business done through the manufacturers' salesmen and their photographs.

The retail furniture dealer, however, is awaking to the realities of competition that is cutting into his profits from all directions. He is becoming convinced that better merchandising and better buying are the solutions to his problems. Continual visits to the market centers are enlarging his knowledge of styles and designs, finishes and construction. Personal contact with the manufacturer and other furniture men is developing a fellowship in the furniture industry that will go a long way in ironing out the many difficulties that inevitably arise between buyer and seller.

Courtesy Sales by Manufacturers—It is recommended that where the manufacturer desires to extend courtesies of this character that he communicate with the local dealer, who should co-operate with the manufacturer in assisting him to extend the courtesy employee sales. Employee sales shall at all times be confined to their own personal use, and the responsibility shall rest upon the manufacturer or jobber that such purchases are truthfully made for their own personal use.

Wholesale Prices—Any matter going through the mails in which wholesale price is given should be enclosed in an envelope, and extreme care should be exercised by manufacturers and wholesalers in the distribution of their catalogs and price lists.

Donations—This is not to be interpreted as applying to solicitations for co-operation for the development of any movement for the general good of the furniture industry.

DEFINITIONS

The Wholesaler—An individual or corporation operating for the purpose of distributing the product of the manufacturer to the retailer.

The Retailer—A retail dealer shall be taken to mean one who owns or controls proper facilities for handling new furniture and who keeps regularly on hand a stock sufficient to meet the demands of the public in his community as far as his invested capital will warrant.

Glossary of Trade Terms and Nomenclatures

Upholstery Materials

UNLIKE other divisions of the furniture industry, there are many terms used in the upholstery trade which are not commonly known by the furniture dealer, and, very often, are not entirely familiar to the furniture manufacturer's salesman. In the following glossary of the National Association of Upholstered Furniture Manufacturers has attempted to compile such terms and to present them in a manner whereby they will be of value to the trade.

Due credit is extended to the publishers of the Upholsterer and Interior Decorator for the use of many terms which originally appeared in that publication.

Arrasene: Arrasene is a chenille-like cord or thread of wool or silk used as an embroidery material for the purpose of ornamenting a fabric. The term Arrasene Embroidery comes from the use of the chenille cord which originally bore the name.

Aubusson: Hand-woven tapestry, made on a low warp loom in the character of the tapestries made in France.

Brocade: Though related to each other, the terms "brocade," "brocaded," "brocart," and "broche," are not synonymous. "Brocade" is the name of a fabric originally of heavy rich texture of Oriental origin woven in patterns with flowers, foliage, figures, etc., more or less in relief. The name is now applied to a large number of figured fabrics, which resemble the original Oriental brocades.

When the figured patterns are applied to a foundation of another weave, such for instance as satin which forms a background to the brocade patterns, the fabric is said to be brocaded. "Brocart" is the French term for brocade. "Broche" is also a French term, and is employed to represent the figures brought out in the weaving of a fabric but which do not form a necessary part of the fabric structure. The yarns with which the figures are composed are introduced in the weaving and raised at intervals to form the necessary pattern. These yarns are dropped to the back of the fabric where not employed and afterwards clipped away remaining only where they appear in the figure, after the manner of crete, which could be called a broche fabric.

Brocart (See brocade).

Brocatelle: A medium-weight fabric formed of a multiplicity of fine silk warp threads interwoven with a coarse silk weft and filling thread. The pattern is formed by alternating the silk weft and filling threads in series so that where the silk weft drops to the back the filling thread is thrown forward and is closely covered by the silk warp to form a pattern in relief. Where the coarse filling thread is allowed to sink to the back the silk weft thread comes to the surface, forming a background to the pattern.

Broche (See brocade).

Burlap: A plain basket-weave canvas made in a wide variety of weights and grades. The jute yarns which compose the warp and weft are very irregular, though usually the warp is finer than the weft. Largely produced in British India and Great Britain.

Chenille: Chenille is the name given to a type of yarn prepared in a loom by weaving coarse weft threads together with warp threads in such a way that when split apart and folded a brush-like thread is produced. The name comes from the French for caterpillar and it is easy to see the analogy between the caterpillar and the thread. The name "chenille" also applies to fabrics and rugs woven of chenille threads.

Corduroy: Originally "cor du roi" or the king's cord. A cotton pile fabric, the pile being formed in ribs lengthwise of the material.

Crete (See brocade).

Crewel Work: Crewel work, so-called, is a form of needlework embroidery which was very popular in England during the Seventeenth Century. It is literally an embroidery of an open character on a plain foundation.

Curled Hair: Curled hair is literally what the name implies. Principally hair from the manes and tails of horses, sterilized, tightly twisted into a rope, steamed and dried. When the rope is unravelled each individual hair has been given a curl and when used in mass, these multiple curls produce a resiliency that is peculiar to hair, maintaining its elasticity as upholstery filling for a considerable period of use. Most curled hair is dyed black during the process of manufacture. (See also moss.)

Damask: A figured silk, wool, jute or cotton material so woven as to produce a pattern without difference of color by jacquard manipulations of the weft threads. The background is usually composed entirely of warp threads in a satin weave. Sometimes the operation is reversed, the background being composed of the warp threads in a satin weave, as for instance, in brocatelle.

Damask, Slip-Cover: A cotton or linen material, usually in natural color, with woven stripes brought up in herringbone or plain satin weave.

Denim, Plain: A cotton warp and weft fabric showing a twill weave on the face side. Piece-dyed denim is woven in the single color of the warp and weft and dyed as the name implies. Yarn-dyed warp and weft are dyed separately, the weft being generally a little heavier than the warp.

Direct Print: Direct printed fabrics are those in which the material is woven and then printed. Warp print means that the warp threads are colored before weaving.

Down: Down feathers are the soft, fluffy structure next to the skin of birds and fowls. They are generally completely hidden by the "countour" or outside feathers. Down makes an excellent stuffing material for upholstered furniture, its pillows and its cushions, due to its lightness, elasticity, freedom from matting and softness. Because of its relative high cost, down is only used in the higher grades of furniture.

Edge, Moss: By moss edge is meant a long pile fabric which is sewed to the edges of cushions and other parts of upholstered furniture for its decorative effect. In the manner in which it is sewed, a rounded appearance is attained. It is usually of long pile mohair, which, due to the stiffness of the fibres, allows the edge to keep its shape.

Embroidery: A decoration in needlework executed by hand on a material already woven. The work is sometimes in relief, sometimes open. Ancient embroideries are of silk, gold and precious stones, of every kind of thread in fact, and every color. The art of embroidery has been practiced in all ages and by all nations. The so-called Bayeux Tapestry is embroidery, reputed to be the work of Queen Matilda, wife of William the Conqueror.

Excelsior: Excelsior is wood which has been cut into long shavings of small dimension. It is sometimes used in very cheap furniture but, as a stuffing material, is inferior to any other. Its most valuable use is in packing, for which purpose it is excellent. "Wood wool" is a trade name given to a very fine grade of excelsior.

Fibre, African: African fibre and palmetto fibre are two names given to a fibre of shredded palm leaves which are twisted into a rope and then uncoiled, leaving the original fibre in curls which produce a resilient material for upholstery fillings. Coir fibre, sometimes called coir hair, is the shredded individual fibres of the husk of the cocoanut. It is treated in the same way as the palm fibre, but it is inferior as a stuffing material.

Fibre, Coir (See African fibre).

Fringe, Bullion: The term bullion has several meanings; its primary meaning relating to solid gold or silver metal as distinguished from base imitations. The term was first applied as a trimming description, to a twisted loop cord fringe the fibres of which were intertwined with strands of gold or silver metal, but for a great many years it has also been used to designate a fringe composed of twisted cords without the introduction of metal. Tinsel fringe is sometimes referred to as "bullion" fringe.

Fringe, Tinsel (See bullion fringe).

Frise: While frise fabrics, so-called, are largely of wool or mohair, there are mixtures of mohair and linen and linen and jute materials of frise character.

Frise materials are also known as uncut velours, that is, velours in which the pile has been woven over wires and not cut, after the manner of a Brussels carpet.

Galloon: Narrow tape or binding of cotton, wool or silk, usually showing fancy weaves, frequently of metal threads.

Gimp: Narrow tape formed of various threads and leathers in a wide variety of designs and colors; used for applique and for covering tack heads in upholstered furniture.

Glaze: French for glossy, lustrous, sometimes used as a description for certain kinds of velvets, damasks, etc.

Hair Cloth: Hair cloth is made of a cotton or linen warp and a filling composed of individual hair fibres, the hair coming principally from the manes or tails of horses.

Hand Blocking: Hand-blocked fabrics are those which receive their colors by the means of blocks of wood cut to design and applied to dyes and then placed on the fabrics and impressed by hand.

High-Warp: That kind of hand made tapestry in which the warp is arranged on the loom vertically like an upright screen. Tapestries made in the Gobelins, France, are made on high-warp looms. The patterns and colorings are woven in by the worker from an example suspended within his line of vision. He reproduces it by colored threads, just as a painter reproduces a picture with pigment.

Jacquard: Loom harness consisting of cards, card cylinders, griffe, comb-board, needles, hooks and cords which control whole weaving. Invented by Joseph Marie Jacquard (1752-1834).

Kapoc: Kapoc is a soft, cotton-like substance which encloses the seeds in the fruit of the bombax tree on the island of Java. Sometimes called silk floss.

Lampas: The term "lampas" was originally applied to East Indian printed silks. In modern terminology, a silk fabric having satin woven figures on a different colored taffeta ground, used for drapery and upholstery.

Leather Substitutes: Without going into a discussion of the chemical formulae, leather substitutes are made of a fabric base coated with a pigment which hardens into a permanent surface. In its plastic state it is subjected to pressure by embossing plates or rollers which impart to it the grain of any desired character of leather.

Low-Warp: Term used to describe a form of loom used in the making of hand-woven tapestries. The warp occupies a horizontal position and the pattern is placed below the warps, where it serves as a guide to the weaver.

Mohair: A wool-like fibre derived from the fleece of the Angora goat. It is largely used in the manufacture of mohair plush, which is the longest-wearing fabric used in the upholstery trade.

Mohair, "Silk": The term "silk mohair" is obviously an anachronism, because the material cannot be at the same time the product of the silk worm and wool from the fleece of an Angora goat. In trade parlance "silk mohair" may be almost any pile fabric, wool pile goods, cotton velour, linen plush, etc. It is obviously a form of deception practiced on the public by a few of the unscrupulous.

Moquette: A short-pile closely woven wool plush, literally a fine pile carpet, used for furniture covering.

Moss: Moss, used for upholstery fillings, is a vegetable growth found in certain parts of Florida, Louisiana and the South, where it grows very rapidly. In its growing state it has a grayish green color and is "fuzzy." After being cut down from the trees over which it grows, the outer case is rotted away, leaving a fine hair-like core, which resembles curled hair. It can be distinguished from hair upon examination in that it has slight expansions, or branching short fibres at regular intervals of about two inches.

Needlepoint: Needlepoint is an embroidery worked on a canvas foundation with woolen threads and a needle. Though sometimes called needlepoint tapestry, the term needlepoint embroidery is preferable, the latter term truly designates the character of the fabric.

Panne: A term applied to plush, mohair or silk, which has been flattened by pressure so that the pile lies close to the back, giving it a shiny appearance.

Piece-Dyed (See "yarn" dyed).

Pile Fabrics: There are three kinds of surfaces commonly called pile surfaces, designated as cut, loop or curled pile, according to the finish. The pile is composed of either the warp or weft threads, according to the method of weaving. Cut-pile fabrics are illustrated by such materials as plush or velvet; loop-pile by Brussels or tapestry carpets or by terry cotton fabrics and uncut mohair plush. Curled-pile fabrics are illustrated by imitation fur, such as astrachan, and some forms of mohair rugs. Pile fabrics are woven in two commercial ways. One by manipulating a set of warp threads over wires in the weaving while a second set of warp threads binds the weft threads tightly in place, holding the loops after the wires are withdrawn. When these wires are equipped with knives at one end they cut the loops in the process of withdrawal.

With the lighter fabrics and even in some heavy fabrics there is another method of weaving which produces two complete fabrics woven at the same time and connected face to face by the pile threads which run from one fabric to the other. At a certain stage in the rolling this fabric comes in contact with a splitting knife which separates the two layers into two distinct fabrics; the pile surfaces are afterwards sheared to an even height.

Double-faced velours are so woven that the loops are formed on both sides of the woof and when cut the loops form a pile on each side of the fabric. In all cases the warp and weft which form the woof are distinct from the warp threads which form the pile face of the material.

Plush (See velvet and velours).

Sateen: A light-weight cotton fabric woven that one side shows a satin-like face in the form of fine twill. It is made both as a plain fabric and printed.

Satin: Broken twill weave; planned so that no two adjacent warp threads are crossed by weft in succession. This method produces a lustrous surface composed entirely of warp threads.

Silk Floss (See kapoc).

Silk, Spun (See thrown silk).

Silk, Thrown: Thrown silk is the raw silk of commerce which has been taken from the cocoons as a continuous fibre united with other continuous fibres and doubled and spun (twisted) into yarns of various sizes. This process of doubling and spinning with continuous fibres is called "throwing." Spun silk is made from broken or waste silk fibres which cannot be "thrown" but must be spun together like other short fibres such as wool, flax, or cotton to make a yarn.

Tapestry: The term tapestry is applied to a fabric woven by hand or mechanical power on a loom and is composed of warp and weft threads manipulated to give the "design" and to form a fabric structure of considerable weight. (See also needlepoint.)

Tapestry, Armure: A characteristic of the armure weave is that the pattern is formed by bringing the warp threads to the surface in long floats on a rep background which varies according to the number of filling threads tied in by the warp.

Tapestry, Bayeaux (See embroidery).

Tapestry, Duplex: An armure weave of tapestry composed of two complete sets of different colored warps and two complete sets of wefts so joined together by binding threads as to form a single fabric with two faces each a different solid color.

Tapestry, Gobelin: The term "Gobelin" in its general use is a trade term representing a type of weave which more or less resembles the hand-made tapestries made at the Gobelin factories in Paris.

The term is also used as an identification term for hand-woven tapestries made on high warp or upright looms. Tapestries from the Gobelin factories, which are government controlled, are not articles of commerce but made under the direction of the French government for presentation purposes. Tapestries of similar character made in commercial factories after the same manner that employed at the government factories are also called Gobelin tapestries, because they are of the character originally developed by Jean Gobelin, the dyer, who began the weaving of tapestries as an auxiliary to his dye business during the Fifteenth Century. The factory he founded in Paris was purchased from his descendants by the government of Louis XIV, and since that time has been carried on as a government institution.

Tapestry, Gros Point (See petit point tapestry).

Tapestry, Petit Point: The use of the word petit point with tapestry is more or less of a misnomer, for petit point technically refers to a type of embroidery on a canvas foundation. The term comes from the French, petit or small point, designating embroidery which crosses single strands of the canvas and distinguished from gros or large point in which the embroidery stitches cross double threads of the canvas, making a larger stitch.

Textiles: Laces, embroideries, rugs, and all woven, felted, knitted or crocheted fabrics are textiles.

Textiles, Embossed: Textiles of all descriptions are embossed by being subjected to the pressure of embossing rollers. On the surface of these rollers the pattern appears in relief and when applied to the fabric by pressure the relieved parts of the pattern press upon the fabric thus transferring the pattern to its surface.

Certain forms of embossing require two rollers operating together, the surface of one being recessed to receive the raised surface of other and when the fabric passes between these rollers, the definite pattern of the rollers is imparted by pressure.

Tow: Tow is the crushed stems and fibres of flax straw, which is grown in North Central States and in Canada. There are various stages of refinement in the production of commercial tow from the very coarse, straw-like stage to the fine, hair-like fibres from which linen thread is produced. As a stuffing material it is less expensive than either curled hair or moss.

Tricot: A low-priced cotton tapestry having a pattern developed by bringing both warp and weft threads to the surface by jacquard manipulation, while an independent shed of warps is brought to the surface at alternating intervals to form a solid background to the pattern. In each case the threads which do not appear on the surface lie to the back of the fabric, where they are held by the binding and filling threads.

Turkey-Work: Turkey-work was a cut needlework embroidery of the Seventeenth Century used for the covering of chairs and other furniture. The figures of turkey-work were usually brought up in relief on a plain tapestry ground.

Velours, Genoese (Frise velours): A pile fabric woven in conjunction with a plain background and a ribbed or uncut pile, creating a fabric that is distinguished from any other form of velvet or velours.

Velvets and Velours: Technically speaking there is no difference between velours and velvet. Velours is the French term for the fabric referred to in English as velvet. Commercially speaking, however, there is a more or less common distinction which differentiates between plush, velours, and velvet according to the length of the pile, velvet pile being the shortest, velours pile slightly longer and plush pile longer still. This distinction is general throughout the trade.

Velvet, Utrecht: A furniture plush or velvet of mohair, the pile of which is sometimes flattened by heavy pressure into a pattern, the upstanding pile forming a soft velvet surface.

Warp Print (See direct print).

Warp Threads: Warp threads are the basic threads of a fabric and run the long way of it; the weft threads are the filling threads running from selvage to selvage in and out between the warp threads.

Weft Threads (See warp threads).

Wood Wool (See excelsior).

Yardage in Upholstery Fabrics: Tapestry, velours, damasks, etc., average in the neighborhood of 50 yards, although two or three yards either way is a common variation.

"Yarn" Dyed: The term "yarn" dyed is used as a distinction from piece-dyed. The term meaning that the color contained in a fabric or in parts of the fabric has been imparted to the yarns before weaving, whereas, the term piece-dyed indicates a material which has been dyed after weaving.

Domestic Rugs

BELOW are listed the most important domestic rugs which are made in room sizes and which are in wide use today. There are so many qualities of each different kind that the statement cannot be made as to which is the best. The following definitions cover the parts of the finished rug fabric.

Warp: The heavy threads of cotton running the long way of the body of rug.

Weft: Binding cords that run across the rug.

Nap: Surface threads, either cut or looped, held by both warp and weft.

Stuffer: Extra yarn running across the fabric to give more body to the back, usually of jute or other inexpensive material, and does not show on the back. Not always used.

Wires: Number of rows per inch of the pile of the rug also of the weft.

Frame: When referring to a "five-" or "six-frame" rug, the number of colors in that rug are what are meant. The frame is a set of creel bobbins carrying worsted warp threads, generally of one color. Sometimes for finer color effects a frame is planted, i. e., worsted threads of two or more colors are arranged side by side in the same frame in groups, in accordance with the design.

Worsted Yarn: The long combings of wool from which all the natural oil has been removed.

Woolen Yarn: Either long or short combings of wool in which all the natural oil has been retained.

Chenilles: Two process rug. First is the weaving of the weft cloth and second is the weaving of the back and combing in of the rows of pile which have been procured from weft cloth. A chenille is seamless and can be woven any size or shape. Usually in plain color or two tone effect. It can be distinguished from the Axminster because there are no ribs on the back. Many qualities of Chenille.

Worsted Wiltons: The best of these have six frames, thirteen and one-third wires or rows to the inch, and two hundred fifty-six pitch across the twenty-seven inch breadth. They all have a cotton back which is contrary to the common belief that worsted Wiltons have a linen back. The colors of some of the buried frames show on the back. Their manufacture is practically the same as Brussels, one major difference being that the loops are cut when the wires are withdrawn so that the surface is velvety instead of smooth and ribbed. One minor difference, which does not apply to all grades of Wiltons, is that for the sake of holding down the pile more securely, there are three shots of weft to each row of pile, instead of two. In attempting to weave a nine-foot Wilton without seams, there was found to be so much vibration caused by the shuttles shooting across the loom and the pulling and inserting of the wires, that the patterns were not even. So three-quarter (27 in.) looms must be used, thus giving the rug seams when the strips are sewed together. There are now, however, about three manufacturers making high grade rugs who have put seamless Wilton rugs on the market, but a good many of these rugs have to be sold for seconds.

Wool Wiltons: The different grades of wool Wiltons depend upon the number of frames used in them. There are usually three to five frames in a wool Wilton rug.

Axminsters: Chief characteristics are a ribbed back, double weft, and a high pile. The number of wefts run from about eleven to the inch in the best down to about four and two-thirds in the cheaper. They are both seamed and seamless, the latter being the better wearing of the two because there are no seams to wear out. The tufts of an Axminster are inserted row by row between the warp threads, either before or after being cut off, and are then bound down by the weft, and so woven into the ground of the texture.

Body Brussels: Woven very similar to a Wilton, but the loops are not cut. The weft is of jute and makes a smooth back. Sometimes the yarn of the buried frames shows on the back. It is uneconomical in manufacture, because, in a five-frame, for every length of worsted that appears on the surface, four times as much is hidden in the body of the fabric, and, except in so far that it acts as filling, is wasted.

Velvets: A velvet can be distinguished from a Wilton in this way: lift up a patterned rug from the end and notice one of the horizontal lines of the border. It does not run exactly straight as the vertical line does. For this reason the patterns are not so clean cut as on a Wilton. On velvet rugs there are not buried frames, as all the yarn is on top. Thus you cannot see any colored yarns on the back as you sometimes can on Wiltons.

Tapestry Brussels: Its pattern is wholly in the surface, and is the direct result of the preliminary and not of the weaving process. No Jacquard is used. Economical in the quantity of pile yarn consumed, as there is only one pile warp-thread carrying the pattern, as against four or five threads in the Brussels and Wiltons. The warp yarn is wrapped around a drum and the color is printed on to form an elongated pattern by a wheel beneath. Then when the yarn is looped around the wires, the pattern is shortened to its final form. A tapestry rug is much lighter weight than a Brussels, and its patterns are not so distinct, nor the colors so good. The cheaper ones are very loosely woven.

Oriental Rugs

ORIENTAL rugs are divided into six kinds; namely, Persian, Turkish, Caucasian, Turkestan, Indian, and Chinese. The Oriental rug business has become so highly commercialized during the last few years, that it would be impossible to name and describe all the rugs that have been put on the American market which are not direct copies of genuine antiques. The descriptions below are those of the original Oriental rugs which have been given most notice by the older Eastern rug makers.

PERSIAN RUGS

Bijar: Heavy texture. Bright colors. Bold medallions enriching the fields of red or dark blue, the corner pieces matching the medallions.

Fereghan: Two leading styles. First, large medallion center of three diamond shaped figures, the center one the larger. Second, one small figure repeated in the ground, often a conventionalized rose leaf. The border stripes carry a small floral design, with the Herati design in the larger stripe of border. Herati design is fish, pear, palm or cone. Weave loose. Colors strong but subdued and well blended. Soft shades of brown.

Gorevan: Rugs made in the district of Herez only finer and more closely woven. Usually medallions. Borders and corners small delicate design. Colors deep blue, red, and green.

Herez: Ground light cream. Light in the center and corners in red and brown with serrated lines carrying small figures.

Kermanshah: Color effects light delicate tints of pink, green, and blue on a field of ivory. Medallions most frequently on a ground of small floral forms, with side panels and several borders carrying floral figures.

Kirman: Weave fine and close. Pile lustrous. Colors soft and well blended. Cypress tree or vine and floral designs most prominent. Prevailing colors are soft delicate blues, greens, rose, and old gold. Some medallions. Patterns suitable for rooms where delicate effects are used.

Kurdistan: Close hard pile. Coarse warp. Ground dark blue or red. Center often large diamond covered with small palm or cone. In some rugs trees varying in form are prominent. General drawing crude but effects good. Taken from garden scenes.

Meshed: Usually medallions on plain field. Noticeable appearance of the cone figures and flame. Meshed the Holy City. Designs like the domes of buildings. Rugs light in shade.

Mosul: Town in Turkey where Nomads carry rugs to sell. Mosul rugs mixed in character, Caucasian, Persian and Turkish. Colors are rich blue, yellow, green, and red. Yellow and brownish red usually prominent. Very often a narrow selvage at ends of cream colored wool with stripes of red and blue.

Sarouk: Rich red, dark royal blue and camels hair brown. Quaint medallion effects often on plain red. White and yellow used. Scroll medallions unlike each other. Strictly Persian in type.

Senna: Small rugs. Medallions in diamond form covered with Herati pattern. Silky pile. Yellows predominate. Often a diamond within a diamond design.

Saraband: The river in India winding through the valley forms a loop. The Saraband weavers use almost exclusively this river bend design in an alllover pattern. Conventionalized it has the appearance of a palm leaf or pear. Borders are a conventionalized pattern. Colors are deep red and blue.

Shiraz: Medallions. Selvage at edge of rugs woven in small checks or bands. Long apron fringe at ends. Floral effects around the medallions and figures of birds. Weft and warp or wool. Loop river design also used. Dark blue characteristic color.

Tabriz: Tree form arranged into medallions. Vivid reds, brown, blues, and ivories. Pile harsh but thick.

TURKISH

Rugs show nitch of the altar in temple. Knot of these rugs woven in such a way that the pile of rugs is not so compact as Persian rugs. Colors bolder and not so well blended.

Bergama: Scarce and very costly. Fine wearing quality. Square in shape. Pile silky. Design large geometrical figures or small squares, like a checker board. Rugs small to large size.

Ladik: Colors red and yellow. Borders resemble lily blossoms. Pomegranate often found. Usually rugs are small.

CAUCASIAN

Geometrical designs. Cold colors. Some designs resemble mountain ranges. In design and colors they partake of the form and colorings of the landscape of that part of Asia.

Daghestan: First rugs brought to this country. Wool warp. Colors Persian in influence. Mostly red and dark blue. Blue most prominent. Geometrical design of star and diamond, in center with several borders with the rectangular design of figures and a latch hook border. Three to five borders.

Kazak: More closely woven than Daghestan. Design more bold. Heavier rugs. Contrast in colors more striking. Very rare and costly.

Karabagh: Many rugs among the cheaper grades. Centers often plain. Figures in border. Light in color. Great deal of white, other colors green, red, and blue.

Soumak: Only Orientals with no pile. Woven with flat stitch. Design geometrical center is usually of two or three or four cartouches. Ground is red and in the large oblong designs blue is most prominent.

Shirvan: Same in design. Four stripes in border with the widest line having zigzag lines with the design. Black and blue ground. Combination of blue, white, and yellow often seen.

Cabistan: Same as Shirvan in design. Long narrow strips principally used as prayer rugs between graves. Its characteristics are somewhat geometrical.

TURKESTAN

Bokhara: General tone of rug is a shade of red. Colors in pattern being brown, black, blue, white, and orange. Design octagon or oblong forms in which are small diamond shape figures. Eight pointed star a characteristic form. Straight dark lines run through cutting the centers of the figures. Border wide usually and carrying zigzag lines.

Beluchistan: Color dark toned reddish brown. Blue prominent. Pile is long. Wide selvage and well covered with floral designs. Square geometrical designs.

Hardyli: Two shades of brownish red. Center design a cross enclosed in a square. Dark red for the ground. Other shades, cream, dark blue.

Khiva: Design octagon in yellow, blue, and white. Squared off by dark lines running through the centers of figures. Two rows of geometrical figures for the border.

Samarcand: Characteristic designs are an arrangement of medallions numbering from three to five, in which are small designs of dragons, fishes, and other figures which show the Chinese influence.

CHINESE

Typical Chinese patterns comprise animal as well as floral designs. Symbolical knots and emblems, mountain cloud and wave ornaments are used. Mythical deer-like creatures called Ki-Lin, crane and stork which are emblems of longevity, bat emblem of happiness, the five-toed dragon and the bush tailed dog or lion appear often. Buddhism has supplied the wheel, canopy, umbrella vase and knot of destiny. Taoism is represented by the flute, fan, castanets, the gourd and glower basket, the sword and lotus pod. The character called shou, which is often on pottery and porcelain and means an invocation for a life, is sometimes used with the interlacing knot of destiny. Signs of the Chinese zodiac are also used. Designs are very conventionalized.

INDIAN

Few rugs are imported from India. Very coarse weave, heavy and thick in texture. Design a combination of vine and floral figures.

Domes of Silence

The final touch to furniture utility and beauty

JUST as the artist's final strokes make or mar his masterpiece, so the finishing touches given the furniture you sell increase or decrease its beauty and its saleability.

Whether you deal in the finest period reproductions or whether you handle furniture that sells at popular prices, you want every piece to put its best foot forward when it meets a possible customer.

Furniture perfection from the customers' point of view is made up of little things, the grain of the wood, the color of the upholstery fabric and, that often overlooked but vitally important item, the furniture footwear.

The artistic poise is often lost when the furniture leg is raised from the floor and the beautiful lines of the artist's original design are destroyed.

FURNITURE FOOTWEAR SHOULD SERVE BUT NEVER BE SEEN

Most types, most periods of furniture we know them today, were designed to rest squarely on the floor. To elevate such furniture an inch or more from the floor destroys much of the beauty of line.

Sliding casters will bring furniture legs so close to the floor that to all appearances there is no furniture footwear employed. They are invisible.

Yet they operate surely, perfectly and silently. The furniture moves easily, without friction, without marring the finest polished floor—without injuring the most delicate floor covering.

Sliding casters are the result of years of experience and scientific study. First proper metal had to be found and a method discovered for treating that metal to produce a frictionless surface. This accomplished, the next step was to arrive at a style of construction that would meet all furniture requirements and overcome all the disadvantages found in old fashioned furniture footwear.

WHY THE CENTER PIN WAS DISCARDED

The center-pin or nail type of construction was tried and discarded. This style was impractical because the operation of hardening the head made the joint between the head and pin very brittle causing the head to break off frequently either when being attached to the furniture or after the furniture had been in use.

Wherever the head dropped off the jagged nail or pin would scratch the floor—tear floor coverings and the resulting dissatisfaction hurt both furniture retailer and manufacturer.

Another disadvantage of this type was that the sliding surface was uneven in thickness. It was thinnest at the point of greatest wear and friction. When it wore through, the head loosened and fell off.

Still another fault that caused the discarding of the center-pin type was the fact that the grain of the wood at the furniture base does not always run perpendicularly. In attaching the slide the nail naturally followed the grain, the head of the slide forming an angle with the base of the leg. If an attempt was made to pound the head into position, either the head dropped off or the joint between head and pin was so weakened that it dropped off in use leaving the jagged nail.

TWENTY-SEVEN TYPES TRIED—ONE CHOSEN

Exactly twenty-seven different types and forms of furniture slides were tried. The twenty-six new ideas that the inventors considered perfect in theory have been, through actual experience, proved faulty in fact.

New ideas in furniture slides have appeared on the market from time to time—and other new ideas will continue to arrive, but please note that each runs its natural course. It blooms a new idea—flourishes for the moment on novelty or price and dies a natural death when subjected to the exacting requirements of every day use and abuse.

This construction is the one perfect construction that has been discovered. The only one that gives a truly frictionless sliding surface—an even thickness—long life and uniformly satisfactory service from the time that the furniture is first assembled in the white at the factory, throughout its journey through the retail showroom and after it has found its place in the home where it moves with the frictionless ease without harming the most sensitive floor.

The three prongs are one piece with the base and are made in such a manner to offer the least resistance when applied. They are bound to enter the furniture straight, and seat flush regardless of the grain. They lock themselves at three points and will not work loose.

After selecting specially tempered steel, which is so necessary for high quality, these slides are drawn into shape by means of heavy, hydraulic machinery.

The next operation, that of hardening, necessitates unusual skill and experience in order to produce the everlasting frictionless surface necessary to a highly practical glide. This can only be achieved by a special heating and chilling process which is the result of years of careful practical experience. Here the inspection is rigid to insure that they are diamond hard, not soft, and are tough, not brittle.

After this hardening process, they are polished for two whole days.

Then they are rust-proofed by a process devised for this purpose, thence back to the polishing room to insure a perfect frictionless surface.

NEARLY THREE WEEKS TO MAKE

Last but not least they are again subjected to another inspection. Almost three weeks from raw material to finished product.

Almost three weeks of careful, painstaking manufacturing processes to perfect this apparently simple but vitally important accessory to the furniture of today.

By the fireside still the light is shining,
The children's arms around the parents twining,
From love so sweet, O who would roam?
Be it ever so homely, home is home.

Shipping Furniture by Express

Proper Packing is Essential

By J. H. BUTLER

American Railway Express Company

IN considering the general subject of the transportation of furniture proper consideration should be given to express service, first, because there is in the aggregate a large amount of furniture shipped by express, and second, because of the special advantages that express service affords under certain circumstances. Small orders and "fill-ins" lend themselves to express handling, particularly when the weight of the shipment is less than 100 pounds as express rates are based on the actual weight whereas the freight rate minimum is 100 pounds. The pick-up and delivery service which the Express Company affords within the well populated districts of all principal cities and towns in the country is a distinct advantage in connection with shipments direct to the household, when any complaint is received as to condition of shipment on arrival there is no divided responsibility between carriers or truckmen.

The Express Classification rules are not at all complicated as they simply provide that furniture must be so packed as to insure safe transportation with ordinary handling on the part of the Express Company. A few specific rules are given to cover special items; for instance:

Maximum gross weight in one outside container

MIRRORS, when value exceeds $2.00 each, must be in wooden boxes. When two or more are packed in the same box ..... 200 Pounds

Single Mirrors ..... 500 Pounds

CHAIRS, K. D. Flat, in bundles securely wrapped, all exposed parts protected by excelsior pads; value must not exceed $10.00 per bundle and weight must not exceed 35 pounds per bundle.

With this exception (Chairs) and one or two other special items, in order for shipments of furniture to move at single rates by express, it is necessary that they be boxed or crated.

In preparing a shipment to move by express careful consideration should be given to the amount of handling which the shipment must necessarily receive between the time it is picked up at the shipper's place of business and finally delivered at the consignee's home or place of business. The average express shipment is handled at least twelve times, and if any transfers in route are involved the number of handlings increases proportionately.

CAREFUL CRATING ESSENTIAL

Express shipments include commodities of all sizes, shapes and character, and it is not possible for the Express Company to stow and brace their shipments in cars in the same manner as is done with freight shipments. The crate should be so constructed as to protect the furniture it contains from damage by contact with other express shipments, and on this account it is particularly important that the slats of the crate be close enough together to avoid the risk of other and smaller crates or boxes causing damage to the furniture. Express shipments must be handled in and out of cars in most cases on the station platform, and therefore it is not a good plan to make the crates any heavier than necessary for proper protection, nor is it advisable to crate two or more pieces of furniture together where it will result in the total weight of the crate and contents being more than can be easily handled by two men.

The express claims in connection with shipments of new furniture have in the past been very heavy, and while the Company admits by the payment of the claims that they are to blame for a large share of this damage, it is also a fact that insecure or unscientific packing is responsible for a lot of the trouble. Rocking chairs are often shipped with the rockers extending beyond the crate, almost inviting trouble. Legs of furniture are allowed to remain even with the bottom of the crate, or in some cases below it, and this of course results in damage in most cases and emphasizes the need, which has already been stated, of careful consideration of the handling the shipment must receive.

INSURANCE OF SHIPMENT

The marking of the shipment also plays an important part both in handling and prompt delivery, and therefore should be given careful attention. Express rules require the consignee's name, full local address, including street and number, destination, and also the name and address of shipper. These rules allow insurance up to $50; or if the shipment weighs more than 100 pounds, the insurance allowed is 50c per pound without extra charge. Whenever a shipment is forwarded at a declared value in excess of $50 or 50c per pound, then the value should also be marked plainly on the shipment, as well as shown in the receipt.

In marking the shipment it is preferable to place the marks directly on the end of the crate and near the top, so that when the crate is placed in the express car with a run of other express matter, the Messenger in the car may easily read the marks. When the address is shown on the top of the crate the carloader is compelled to either place the crate in the car in other than its proper position, or if he piles packages on top of the crate, the Messenger cannot read the marks without removing these packages. Wherever it is possible to do so, we advocate that the consignee's name and address be also shown on the article inside the crate. It can be written on the paper wrapping or on a tag attached to the piece of furniture or other article crated so that in case anything does happen whereby the crate is broken or the boards containing the address are torn off, the "inside information," as we call it, will still be there and enable us to make delivery without delay.

These suggestions are not offered solely with the idea of saving money for the Express Company but more with a view of giving the furniture shipper the service he desires; namely, delivery of shipments in good condition and without delay. Customers will not be satisfied with anything short of this, and if one shipper by careful attention to these details is able to get his shipments through with no damage or delay, he will have an advantage over his competitor who does not take the time and trouble to accomplish this. There is an old saying in the express service that "a shipment started right is half way there" and this has been proven many times over in actual operation.

CO-OPERATION NECESSARY

The showing made in the prevention of loss and damage claims on shipments of furniture has not been nearly so satisfactory as with most other commodities, and it is for that reason that the Express Company inaugurated a special drive for the better preparation and better handling of furniture shipments. We know from experience that by close co-operation between the shipper and the Express Company that a great deal can be accomplished of mutual benefit. The fact must be remembered that no matter how careful the carrier handles a shipment it cannot get through to destination without some damage if it is not properly packed in the first place.

During the first eight months of this year the American Railway Express Company paid for loss and damage to new furniture $166,355.00, and, strange as it may seem, this is the largest single item on their entire list of commodities. It represents an economic loss which should not be permitted to continue, and the amount paid does not of course represent the total expenditure, nor does it reflect the disappointment, inconvenience and annoyance caused the customer whose goods fail to reach him in good condition.

It is not fair to assume that the express employes are wilfully careless or negligent in the handling of furniture shipments. Certainly they have no reason for handling these shipments with any less care than other shipments. On a general average of shipments handled by express, claims for damage run less than one to one thousand shipments; in other words 99.9% of the shipments handled are not involved in claims for damage. There is apparently no good reason why the damage to furniture shipments handled should exceed this general average. While we have not the actual figures to show just what portion of the total number of furniture shipments made are involved in damage claims, we are sure that the ratio of damage is considerably greater.

INVESTIGATE CAUSE OF DAMAGE

Perhaps all has been done that can be in a general way. It appears now that we should get down to "brass tacks" and deal with individual cases as we find them. Any dealer who finds that his shipments are being damaged in transit should not be satisfied with the mere payment of claim but should, on his own behalf, make an investigation to determine, if possible, the cause of the damage.

Every claim is a danger signal—it represents something wrong somewhere, and if the shippers blame the carriers and the carriers blame the shippers, we are not going to get very far in the matter of claim prevention. We must work together and the work can best be done in the field where the trouble is found to exist. The shippers should watch their claims very closely and they may find that the same article of furniture is being damaged in the same way over and over again and that this damage can be prevented by a slight change in the packing protection afforded. The consignee should be urged to promptly report all cases of damage and allow a representative of the carrier to make an inspection of the crate and the contents, and when reports are received from carriers indicating that in their opinion shipment was not properly protected, those reports should be given careful consideration.

The figures reported above are sufficient to explain the deep interest which we have in this matter and very definite steps have been taken to eliminate any rough or otherwise improper handling of furniture shipments by express. We urge shippers to also do their part in the matter of packing.

*The fond attachment to the well-known place
Whence first we started into life's long race,
Maintains its hold with such unflinching sway,
We feel it e'en in age, and at our latest day.*

American Art Bureau

Better Pictures in the Home

By MARGERY CURREY

THE American Art Bureau is a trade association devoted to promoting the use of pictures in homes, schools, offices, clubs and other appropriate places.

Through a complete campaign of educational publicity, aided by the American Homes Bureau, the Art Bureau is impressing upon the public the fact that pictures are a necessary part of the decorative features of the home. The two bureaus are telling the public of the really beautiful reproductions of masterpieces of paintings, modern and classic, which are now available at prices that the average person can pay.

The American Art Bureau is composed of and supported by picture publishers, and frame, moulding and mirror manufacturers and jobbers. Its object is to carry on a thorough publicity and advertising campaign, with the co-operation of the American Homes Bureau, as a result of which there will be greater trade for the retail dealer in pictures, mirrors and frames. There is no membership fee to the dealer. The publicity, which has come in great volume, appears in the news columns of magazines and newspapers, it comes through public school study of pictures, through women's club programs, lectures on interior decoration and many other channels, all taken advantage of by the American Art Bureau.

The publicity so secured has made, and is making, a picture-buying public. During this past year, when many industries have complained of a poor market, the picture and frame industry has had more business than ever, according to canvass made.

RETAIL DEALER ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

Besides creating an ever increasing buying public on the one hand, on the other hand the American Art Bureau produces expert advertising material for the retail dealer to use. This material includes advertising folders written with the intent to show the public the value of pictures, and to bring him to the picture shop; other folders showing the proper use of pictures in home furnishing. These folders may be sent out on a mailing list, or distributed in the store. Advertisements of different sizes are prepared, for use in the advertising columns of the local paper; articles about pictures are written, which may be printed in the papers of the city.

Included also in this dealer advertising campaign are hand books or suggestions for a complete local advertising campaign; other handbooks telling how properly to decorate a display window and how to build up a local advertising campaign. Most of this material is free of charge. The printed matter, when ordered in quantity, is sent to the dealer, with his name imprinted upon it, for the mere cost of paper and printing.

The frequent bulletins, sent out free of charge to the retail dealers of the country, contain suggestions to help them in the sale of their pictures.

There are also attractive window display cards in color, which may be framed and put in the window. The observance of the annual National Picture Week, which is celebrated in the Fall, under the direction of this organization, has caused much added picture trade, because of its concentrated attention upon pictures. Both the Art Bureau and its publicity campaign are endorsed by art museums, schools, libraries and women's clubs.

The free advertising campaign is available to all furniture dealers who carry a line of pictures and frames. Write for it to the American Art Bureau, 166 West Jackson Boulevard, Chicago.

It is to assure the success of the dealer in pictures, frames and mirrors that the Art Bureau was formed. The entire campaign is based on the idea that trade advertising is particularly valuable in the picture business, in showing the necessity of having good pictures, and the close connection between pictures and furniture, in a well appointed home.

Terms Used in Picture Industry.

Processes Explained

Aquatint: A print made by a method in which the surface of a plate, after the design has been outlined upon it, is coated with a powdered rosin preparation and etched. This produces a graining in the finished print which gives the effect of an India-ink drawing.

Bevelled (of mirrors): A finish in which the edge slopes away from the general plane of the surface.

Burnished: Having a finish or lustre produced by polishing. Burnished gold: A finish on moulding made of gold leaf. Burnished bronze: Imitation gold finish.

Color Etchings: Etching prints which have been colored after the print was taken from the press; or, sometimes, etching prints which have been tinted on the plate, and the impression taken from this.

Cornice (when used of house furnishing): The horizontal moulding which crowns the door frame or inner window frame at the top, projecting out from the frame and usually attached to it. The cornice acts as a finish, covering the gatherings at the top of the curtains.

Crayon: A drawing executed with crayons; ■ black or colored chalk used in drawing; see pastel.

Cut-corner (used of frames): Having two or all four corners of a rectangular frame cut off, with a short piece of moulding mitted in to take the place of the corners.

Drypoint Engraving: The production of incised lines on ■ copper or steel plate mechanically, with a sharp steel point, as distinguished from etching, in which lines are bitten in by acid.

Engraving: A print made from an engraved metal plate; engraving is the art of producing or cutting pictures or designs on metal, stone or wood, either incised or in relief. See wood engraving.

Etching: A process of engraving in which the incised lines are produced by the biting of an acid. The surface of the metal plate is covered with a thin coat of wax, asphaltum, or varnish, which is scratched with the etching needle where lines are desired, and the exposed part subjected to the action of the corrosive acid. An etching (picture) is an impression or print taken, through ■ etching press, from an etched plate.

Lithograph: A print made by the process of lithography. A crayon drawing on stone.

Lithography: This means "drawing on stone." The crayon used in lithography is partly composed of soap, which sinks into the stone wherever it is touched by the crayon. When the drawing is finished, the surface of the stone is covered with acid for the purpose of fixing the drawing, or rather for rendering the parts not drawn upon less capable of receiving the ink in the printing. In order to print impressions, the stone is moistened with water, and ■ water and grease do not combine, the parts drawn upon repel the water, while the parts not drawn upon absorb it. A roller charged with greasy ink is now passed over the surface, and for the same reason as before the ink is repelled by the wet parts, and adheres to every part drawn upon. A sheet of paper is placed upon the stone, which is then passed through the press. The ink becomes transferred to the paper, and produces an exact facsimile of the original drawing. (From A. Curtis' "Masters of Lithography.")

At the present day, ■ sheet of zinc usually takes the place of the lithographic stone.

Mat (of ■ picture): A border of white or tinted cardboard or with ■ gold surface, either inside the frame of a picture, and commonly under the glass covering the picture, or serving simply as an inner frame or margin; the mounting cardboard to which the picture is attached before framing it, to give it body and protection.

Mezzotint: The process of making mezzotint prints has always been a primarily reproducing art. By its process we are enabled to become intimate with the great pieces of art which are thus reproduced. In reproducing an original painting by the process of the mezzotint, the artist treats ■ copper plate with an instrument which roughens it very finely and evenly, so that the plate looks like ■ fine piece of metallic velvet. Then the plate is scraped with ■ steel instrument. The further the plate is scraped in certain spots, the nearer to white that part of the picture will be, when printed from the plate. Many mezzotints are in black-and-white; although color is frequently added by coloring the plate by hand before each impression is taken, and a very beautiful reproduction of the original is obtained, in which not only the line and composition of the original is shown, but the beauty of color as well.

Mounting Board: All pictures before framing, should be attached to mounting board, as a protection to them, and in order to prevent wrinkling under the glass.

Passe-partout (in picture framing): A piece of cardboard, wood or the like, which has its central portion cut out for the reception of the picture, and thus serves as a mat or border for it; the picture with the passe-partout is put between a glass and a back of cardboard, the whole being held together by strips of paper or cloth pasted over the edge and forming a frame. Passe-partout means "all-around."

Pastel: A picture made with pastel crayons. Pastel crayons are made of a kind of paste composed of a color or colors ground and mixed with gum-water. Pastel shades are soft and blending.

Photogravure: The process of producing an intaglio plate for printing, in which there are no sharp incised lines, but minute depressions, the deep parts producing the shadows, and the high parts showing white. A photographic sensitive film that has been printed from a negative is laid on ■ metal plate, and developed and bitten in with an acid, producing a plate that may be printed from, like a copper plate.

Polychrome: Many colored; polychrome frames are those showing a variety of color, or a change of color.

Silvered (of mirror glass): Coated with an amalgam of tin and mercury, resembling silver in appearance. This converts glass into ■ reflecting mirror.

Silhouette: A representation of the outlines of an object, filled in with black or some other uniform color; a profile of this kind, such as a shadow appears to be. Silhouettes were a quaint form of old-fashioned portrait.

Stand Frame: A frame mounted on a standard. Stand frames are usually those intended for photographs, and are meant to stand on a desk or table, rather than to hang on the wall.

Stippled (of picture frames and mouldings): Ornamented with paint or gilt applied by repeated small touches, or strokes; thus giving a mottled effect, or producing an even or softly graded shading.

Swing Frame: A frame mounted on ■ standard and pivoted at the top and bottom so that the frame with its enclosed picture may be turned at various angles. Swing frames are in general used for photographs, to stand on desk or table.

Woodcut: A type of high block of finely grained wood, as boxwood, engraved with a picture or design; also a print from such a block.

Wood Engraving: In wood engraving, the design is drawn on, or transferred to, ■ boxwood block and the wood cut away from the drawing, leaving the lines and spots, which constitute the design, standing in relief. The print is made from this block.

An Aid to Furniture Sales

Pictures set off its beauty

THE close relationship of pictures to the furnishings of ■ room, its hangings and other appointments, is of such fundamental importance that many interior decorators and others of taste and discrimination feel that ■ picture should be made the central spot of decorative interest in the entire scheme of room decoration.

It is because of this close association between pictures and furniture in the mind of the home maker that the furniture dealer is logically a picture dealer also. It is a recognized fact that to place a harmonious picture on the wall of ■ room near a furniture grouping, is to add infinitely to the appearance and charm of the furniture. This is true in the home; it is even more so in the store, which needs every aid to help the customer visualize the furniture as it will look in her home, in its new surroundings. Pictures actually improve the furniture, in the lustre of their color, in their pleasing contrasts, and in the air of completeness that is added to the grouping when they are placed.

Pictures occupy no additional space in a store, even while they add so greatly to the beauty of the things displayed there. They hang on the wall, just as they do when in the home. With this excellent opportunity for display, they are seen at their best, and readily sold. Pictures make furniture sales, and furniture makes picture sales. Pictures are an element of decorative value in a window display, heightening the desirability of the furniture and draperies shown there.

Because of the easy sale of pictures, when shown as part of the furnishings of ■ house, they are ■ quickly-growing commodity to carry in stock, and a commodity which pays its way as a salesman while bringing in its own profits.

Another feature that promotes the sale of pictures is the great volume of trade advertising and publicity which is every day of the year stimulating the public to buy pictures. This publicity appears in leading magazines and newspapers, and is having ■ booming effect upon the picture and frame industry.

You should yourself be one of those to come in for your share of profits.

*The Oldest
A.B.C. Business Paper in the Furniture Field*

SERVING the retail dealer and oldest among A. B. C. business papers in the furniture field is the Grand Rapids Furniture Record. Progressive dealers read this magazine for the many business building ideas it contains, and to keep abreast of the times on the latest trend in furniture and home furnishings.

The Record is credited by its readers as being the most complete manual on merchandising and management in the furniture field. It enables the dealer to solve his merchandising problems by means of well illustrated, straight-to-the-point articles that are practical in application and of proven merit.

For a quarter of a century the Record has been a leader in the campaign for better homes. It has urged its readers to better methods, higher quality, a thorough knowledge of their industry and effective methods of dealing with their customers.

THE GRAND

FURNITUR

THE chief and associate editors of THE GRAND RAPIDS FURNITURE RECORD are salesmen of ideas. It is their function to find new merchandising ideas and to lead in the development of the furniture industry. They see and point out both sides of a question with unbiased authority. Their services are at the disposal of dealer-readers, and include lectures to store salesmen on better merchandising and sales methods. THE RECORD also offers personal service to its readers by means of our Editorial and Service Departments, which will be glad to send you any available store data or merchandising information you require.

THE Furniture Manufacturer and Artisan is the only A. B. C. business paper published serving this great industry exclusively. It has been in the field for the past 45 years, and you will now find it in practically every worth-while furniture factory in the United States.

Editorially its pages are devoted to the problems of all departments in the factory--cost finding and collections, news of the markets, trend in design. Its articles are written by men who are specialists and authorities in their respective fields.

Many factories are now looking to the vocational and industrial training schools for skilled artisans, junior foremen and executives of the future. The Furniture Manufacturer and Artisan plays an important part in the training offered by these schools, as an important element of its circulation is concentrated there.

As proof of reader interest see the table above. In 472 factories this paper had 5,380 readers. What better evidence of its value to both reader and manufacturer can be found?

BEAUTIFUL SUITE

ITALIAN RENAISSANCE

YOU'LL find the same extremely high class workmanship in all numbers of the MIDWEST line, which is so apparent in this captivating and charming No. 1400 Suite.

THE sturdy construction for which MIDWEST dining room furniture has become so favorably known, is carried out in every detail of these beautiful pieces.

All cases are made with mortise and tenon construction—the backs, bottoms and partitions are of 1 inch hardwood. Three ply  $\frac{1}{4}$ -inch mahogany drawer bottoms and quartered sycamore sides.

They are dust-proof constructed with three ply birch and beautifully finished inside with shellac and wax.

NOTE the long commodious linen drawer which is a feature of all MIDWEST Dining Suites—eliminates the necessity of folding the linen—this appeals strongly to the practical housewife.

All finishing materials are of the highest grade, applied by skilled mechanics, giving that exquisite tone and soft velvety feel which is to be found in all finishes of MIDWEST Dining Room Furniture.

Each of the pieces, including the chairs, is made complete in our plant, insuring that much sought after harmony in design and finish.

GRAND RAPIDS

THE CIVILIZATION of ancient nations is judged by the examples of art which time and circumstance have not destroyed.

We estimate the culture and prosperity of former peoples by the character of their craftsmanship. Thebes, Athens, Rome, Pompeii, Venice and many other historic cities, have all been centers of glorious artistic ability. The ruins of ancient Greece tell us of the existence of a cultured race. Their work is still an inspiration to the architect, the artist and the historian. Nevertheless, all their work was of one type, developed to its highest degree of perfection. Lack of communication, and in many cases, the natural separation of periods of time, prevented the international exchange of ideas and experience.

In all the history of the world, the art of a nation has followed its commercial prosperity and national unity.

Only a few decades have passed since the United States became a united nation, and it is within the period of a generation that the nation has turned to art as means of expressing national ideals. Fifty years ago, people were satisfied with furniture that simply met the needs of the moment and factories were operated wherever materials were at hand. In just such a manner Grand Rapids became a furniture manufacturing town, the proximity of standing lumber being the prime reason for the commencement of the industry.

The importation of expert craftsmen was the first step of progress made by the Grand Rapids manufacturers, and dealers throughout the country began to make personal investigation of the product of the town. This renown was a spur to the manufacturers, and Grand Rapids quality became the standard of excellence in the country.

Toward the end of the last century, history was again repeating itself, in that unity and prosperity in the United States had developed a nation-wide desire for art in all things. The Grand Rapids manufacturers were first to note the signs of the times and with one accord undertook the task of making Grand Rapids the modern center of art as applied to furniture for the home. The world's best furniture designers, and all the collected information concerning the history of art, were brought to the growing city.

Changing times, international communication, and business on a universal basis, had put all the art history of the world at the service of the men who sought it, and in the beginning of the Twentieth Century Grand Rapids had become world famous as the center of knowledge of historic design and its application to modern needs.

Today, the dealers in better class home furnishings know that so long as Grand Rapids maintains its organization of expert designers and superior craftsmen, it will be the natural place to buy merchandise suitable for the increasing number of superb American homes.

In every city, village, discriminating people who love the beautiful and unusual

For these people we offer you as their dealer a service, in the way of a distinguished line of old master reproductions . . . . consoles, cabinets, desks and odd things for living room and hall.

This beautiful furniture we are making represents a type of merchandise which is different from anything on the market. It is exclusive, distinctive and beautiful, conceived by real artists and executed by skilled craftsmen who are trained to reproduce the richly decorative effects of the 16th and 17th centuries—the kind of furniture which will become more and more valuable with years of use.

It is "priceless" in effect, because it is truly artistic—yet its cost is moderate. It is a prestige-bringing as well as a profitable line on the dealer's floor.

We are pleased to announce that we have brought out this season a line of upholstered pieces—suites, davenports, wing chairs, odd chairs, benches, love seats—which are the last word in quality, construction and effectiveness at a medium price. This furniture is good-looking and well-tailored. The coverings have been especially selected to enable us to offer artistic attractiveness at moderate cost, and it is a line which will appeal to discriminating people.

Thoroughness

A Quality Needing Emphasis in This Hurried Age

THE Grand Rapids Chair Company is perhaps old fashioned in that it is still actuated by its half century ideal of Thoroughness in the furniture it makes for the American home. It puts an honest effort into every article it produces, so that it will be worthy of its trademark, so that the conscientious dealer and salesman can recommend it without misgivings, and so that it will prove a beautiful and serviceable addition to the home.

We use good woods, take plenty of time to finish them carefully, employ a great deal of hand work on the furniture, and still do much of the exacting cabinet work in the old fashioned way, because we know there is no short cut to enduring craftsmanship. Much of the furniture made by this factory nearly a half century ago is still beautiful and serviceable in homes throughout the nation.

Our productions reflect the ideal of Quality rather than Quantity. Hence, when an exclusive franchise is enjoyed by a distributor of our products he values it as a prime asset.

A few reasons why QUAINT AMERICAN FURNITURE is sold in the best stores in both large and small cities:

1. It meets modern conditions of size and style of building.
2. It is backed by the good will built up during years of the production of Quaint Furniture.
3. It is produced in series—permitting interchange of patterns into any desired grouping.
4. Its exclusive finish and decoration (by native Japanese artists.) When once seen by prospective customer anywhere in his travels he is convinced against accepting one of the several attempted imitations.
5. It lends itself perfectly, not only to complete groupings but to "odd-piece" use. A group of this furniture is the best for some room in every home regardless of its size or price and whether apartment, city home, or suburban.
6. It sells.

Odd Wall Group

There are many of these in small halls, bedrooms, living rooms and breakfast rooms of modern homes. A quaint treatment best overcomes the bare effect.

A Sun Room Corner

Where more comfort is being demanded and given. In finish and construction, sunroom or lounge furniture has outgrown the porch furniture stage. It is now a second and most used living room.

A Daughter's Room or Guest Room Group

Taken from the smaller pieces of the Bedroom line. This is a typical solution of the grown-up juvenile problem. The furniture follows the child to school or later becomes guest room furniture.

The Fire Place

Regardless of the furnishing of the remainder of the living room, sunroom or bedroom seems to demand Early American. Here again the group should be an odd one and should be Quaint American.

Living Room in a Moderate-sized Home or Apartment

Many of the same comfortable sunroom pieces are ideal for this type of room. The "versatility" of this furniture, (its application in several parts of the home) naturally results in ready turn-over for the dealer.

That Odd Window-Corner

Often so troublesome when the remainder of the room has been furnished, is here shown with a typical small group of Quaint American pieces.

First Choice in Nearly a Million American Homes

The astonishing progress recorded in sales during the past year is a telling indication of the overwhelming popularity of the A-B Gas Range. It is likewise a commendable endorsement of the strategic merchandise co-operation placed squarely behind these alert gas range merchandisers throughout the country who constitute the A-B selling organization.

The approval and endorsement accorded the A-B Gas Range by both Good Housekeeping and Modern Priscilla confirm the judgment of America's foremost authorities and the notable homes where the A-B is a treasured possession.

Whether or not you are conscious of the qualities which have made the A-B Gas Range so infinitely attractive to nearly a million American homes, you cannot sense its true merchandising potentialities till you bring yourself in intimate contact with the opportunities they present.

The A-B Selling Franchise offers exceptional merchandising opportunities to organizations with a keen appreciation of the value of trade leadership.

The Center of Production

ABILITY is power or capacity to produce! Furniture manufacturers in Chicago possess ability because they enjoy the facilities of a great city which is located in the heart of America's industrial activity.

Forty railroads terminate in Chicago, making it the railroad center of the United States. This unrivaled situation furnishes the furniture manufacturer of Chicago quick access to his raw materials. Unequaled in completeness of assortment, the accessory materials manufactured in Chicago gives its manufacturers a distinct advantage over competitors in other cities. Production by machine methods and standardization of manufacture, aided by the city's large supply of skilled workmen, and ease in securing materials establish a cost of producing furniture that is probably lower than any other furniture center.

Not only is there a variety of grades ranging from the finest special to the medium and low grades but Chicago is unexcelled in the diversity of furniture commodities it manufactures. Every household furnishing from the hat rack in the hall to the cabinet in the kitchen and the night lamp in my lady's boudoir is manufactured in Chicago; upholstered furniture, tables, chairs, lamps and shades, gas and oil stoves and ranges, refrigerators, reed and rattan furniture, commercial furniture, case goods and metal furniture.

The furniture buyer can purchase a complete stock of every variety and grade for his store, suitable to the demands of his community.

Sixty-five per cent of the furniture stores in the country are within twenty-four hours' ride of Chicago. Furniture can be shipped to the most distant point in the United States in three days by express and nine days by freight. Over 2500 package cars leaving daily testify to the merchandise service furnished by Chicago manufacturers.

The Chicago Furniture Forwarding Company, organized and controlled by the Chicago Furniture Manufacturers' Association, has warehouse facilities in ample proportion for the consolidation and prompt forwarding of less than carload shipments from and through the Chicago gateway. This service enables rapid turn over of less than carload orders and embraces carloading operations between Chicago and over thirty cities and distributing centers throughout the west and south.

Ideal manufacturing conditions, and consequent low cost of production, celerity and dispatch in delivery, reasonableness in cost of transportation and variety of household products available, are the factors that draw thousands of furniture merchants irresistibly to Chicago to buy Chicago-made-furniture.

The CHICAGO FURNITURE AS A LAW LIBRARY

A furniture merchant who misses the Market is like a lawyer without a library. A good lawyer must maintain an up-to-date collection of books. He must read the latest decisions of the State and Federal Supreme Courts as they are published. ## Furniture Dealer

The furniture dealer who realizes this, uses pictures at all times to beautify his displays of furniture, thereby helping the customer to visualize entire home settings. Pictures enliven both window and interior displays.

Interior decorators have found that pictures and mirrors accent the beauty of individual pieces of furniture, and help to sell that furniture. An appropriate picture, hung above a cabinet or table, draws attention to the desirability of this piece.

Dining rooms demand color. A brilliant picture, well framed and hung above a buffet, helps to visualize to the customer the charm of the buffet in her own dining room.

This furniture grouping, recently placed in a large New York department store, was sold as an entirety many times over. The combination of pictures with furniture showed to customers the effect in their own homes.

In this fine modern home the furniture, woodwork and floors are all walnut

American Walnut

Advertising has created a vogue for this fine cabinet wood

American Walnut advertising blazed the trail for the better homes movement. It has helped to create a new appreciation of beautiful furnishings for the home.

The campaign for walnut has already revolutionized furniture making in the United States. Before the war 90% of the walnut produced here went to foreign cabinet makers. Now only 10% is being exported. 90% is used in the United States, largely by furniture makers.

A permanent demand for Walnut

The vogue of walnut furniture is healthy, and growing consistently. It is not due to a fad, or to the swing of the cycle of fashions.

It is due to the continuous and enlarged American Walnut advertising activities, which have created vast new demands for better furniture and better homes.

The supply of Walnut is plentiful

Recent statistics show that there is one billion, eight hundred million feet of merchantable standing walnut timber. Enough to last more than thirty-five years. And this does not include the growing young walnut, of which there are literally millions of trees.

The qualities of Walnut are superb!

Walnut is unrivaled in beauty. Its rich brown color was placed in the wood by the hand of nature. It has endless variety of grain and figure that combines the essence of dignity, distinction and beauty.

Walnut is a real "heirloom" wood. Its remarkable qualities have preserved for us the fine furniture of the past, and will make the furniture of today the treasures of a future generation.

And the best of it is that walnut's beauty is not fragile. It can take the punishment of vigorous everyday use and the play of healthy children and still keep its beauty—and with a minimum of care. The busy housewife appreciates its ease of upkeep.

American Walnut furniture finds a ready market. It is easiest to sell because of its vogue and high qualities. Dealers find that today real walnut furniture practically sells itself. So it brings a quick turnover, which means greater profits.

In no line purchased by furniture buyers is there so great an opportunity to build in quality as in bed springs. Not always visible but sure to find expression in years of satisfactory service.

Over thirty-five years' experience in building nothing but bed springs is what guarantees Tiger Downy Rest. Highest quality materials, skilled mechanics in this line and conscientious supervision of details assure all buyers that Downy Rest bedsprings are just as good as we know how to make them.

As a natural result of the ever-increasing demand for better house furnishings, the Tiger Downy Rest has increased in popularity.

Aside from the selfish interest any retailer or manufacturer may have in increased volume of business, there is always a feeling of having rendered a real service when merchandise of the better quality has been sold.

Tiger Downy Rest typifies all that is good in bed springs when service is the unit of measure.

Only the largest manufacturer can give such values

Only the largest manufacturer, with vast buying and producing facilities, can afford to give such value for the money as the Kroehler Manufacturing Company offers.

In the whole field of living room furniture, the makers of Kroehler Davenport Beds are by far the largest manufacturers.

They specialize in one type of furniture—davenports, davenport beds and accompanying chairs.

This concentration in one direction permits them to devote their entire efforts to the development and refinement of these pieces.

Their vast purchasing power enables them to obtain raw materials at the market's most favorable prices.

Their eight great factories have been developed to a point of efficiency that keeps manufacturing costs to the lowest possible figure.

These are the facilities that enable the makers of Kroehler Living Room Furniture to offer such remarkable values.

In addition to the low price, the Kroehler Line offers two outstanding features—hidden values that cannot be duplicated in any other furniture selling at the same price, and an advertising campaign that is the largest in the industry.

The national advertising of Kroehler Davenports and Davenport Beds reaches approximately one out of every two families in your community. It is a great local campaign for you—places a powerful sales weapon in your hands.

All that is needed to make the Kroehler Line the most profitable merchandise you have ever carried is your own selling effort behind it.

Have you tied up with this dominating line? If not, you are missing a profit opportunity perhaps without equal in the furniture field. Write for catalog, prices and outline of our great national advertising and merchandising program.

SUPPLY

AN outstanding reason for the high valuation which dealers place on the Karpen agency is the tremendous production facilities of the Karpen plants, which insure an unlimited supply at all times. The output of the four Karpen factories is almost inconceivable, and the diversity of the Karpen lines adequate for a widely varying demand.

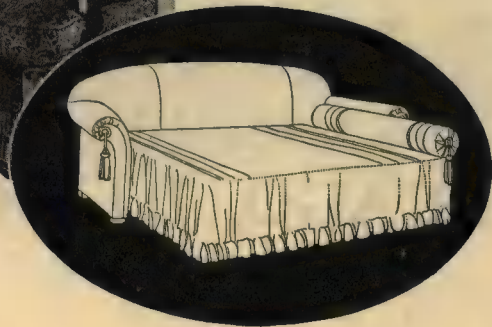

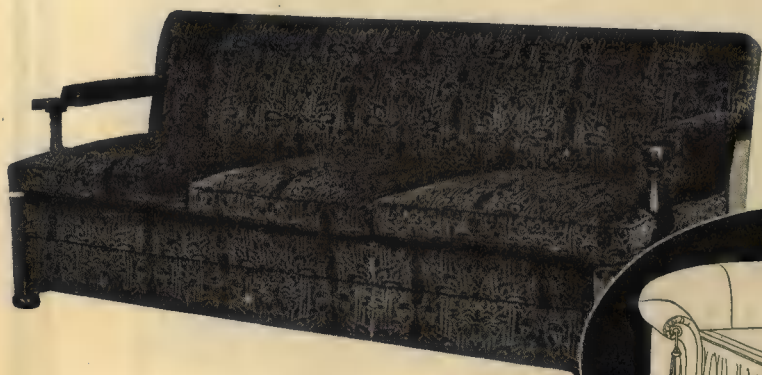

Lowered unit cost has been the natural outcome of quantity production, and Karpen dealers are able to give more value per dollar in Karpen Furniture than in any other line.

A Sale is Never Lost Until You've Covered Every Good Point—

The use of a steel part on furniture assures you of its superiority for the purpose. Were it otherwise, furniture manufacturers—woodworkers—would not use them.

The inadequacy of wood for important structural joints and connections, as well as movable parts, has built up this institution, which for fifty years has specialized in hardware, mechanical devices and steel equipment for use on furniture. The Seng Company is a specialist branch of the entire furniture industry, an important production factor to all manufacturers who believe in the best, and in providing it at the lowest possible price.

Study the steel parts—whatever they are, wherever you find them. Odds are they were made by Seng. The mere mention of these features, for such they are, will turn many a hesitant shopper into a buyer—and often quite quickly—particularly if the quality of being well made is of any consequence.

A Group that Tells a Story

HERE is a group that typifies Rockford, where fine furniture making is an art that is passed on from one generation to the next. It shows father, son and grandson, three generations of a family, to whom fine cabinet making has always been an heritage.

The grandfather received his first training at the hands of his father many years ago in the "old country" across the sea. He has been in the employ of one of the Rockford furniture factories for nearly forty years and his son has worked with him at the adjoining bench in the same plant for more than thirty.

The grandson has been working with them for only a year or so, but under the guidance of father and grandfather, is rapidly preparing himself to continue the art which they have made their life's work.

To see father and son working side by side is a common sight in Rockford and the skill that comes through generations of training is reflected in the furniture they produce. That is why Rockford furniture bears an enviable reputation for the high quality of its workmanship.

It is this workmanship, combined with that which is best in design, materials, construction and finish which is guaranteed in furniture bearing the Rockford label. This label stands for satisfaction—satisfaction to dealer and customer alike.

Evansville, Indiana

One of the Greatest Furniture Producing Centers of the United States

It has been said that more furniture is produced in Indiana than in any other state in the Union. Evansville, unquestionably, produces more furniture than all the other furniture producing points in the state combined. There are thirty-five factories producing furniture to completely outfit the home, and also the office. The furniture for the home is of the medium and higher grades and meets the requirements of every section of the country, and the office furniture will compare favorably with the best that is produced.

Within less than half a century Evansville has attained preeminence as a furniture producing center. Its products are sold in every state of the Union, Canada, Mexico, Cuba, Porto Rico, and Latin-American countries. Even in distant China and South Africa, Evansville-made furniture can be found.

The investment of the furniture industry in Evansville is approximately twenty million dollars; the production in 1923 was fifteen million dollars. Approximately forty-five hundred workmen are employed in the industry.

Evansville is the most centrally located of the large furniture producing points, being in the populous Mississippi Valley, midway between the North and South. The remarkable growth of the industry is attributed to close proximity to the raw material, location on the Ohio River, reasonable freight rates, and excellent labor conditions. The factories are of modern construction and some of them are among the largest in the country.

Semi-Annual Furniture and Stove Markets (combined) are held, having been inaugurated in April, 1921, under the auspices of The Furniture Manufacturers Association of Evansville. At the time the first Market was held there were but two permanent exhibition buildings, the Furniture Building, and Klammer Building. Two more buildings have since been opened, the Graulich Building, and Ohio Valley Furniture Company Building, giving the Evansville Market four large permanent buildings in which are displayed the products of Evansville furniture and stove manufacturers, and the lines of manufacturers located at points distant from Evansville.

The Market has proved a most effective advertising medium and attracts large numbers of buyers from every section of the United States, also Canada, Cuba, Porto Rico, and Mexico. The Market is a permanent institution.

Unsurpassed shipping facilities are offered the buyer in the Evansville market. Seven steam railroads, a network of electric roads, and the Ohio River, are the mediums by which shipments move promptly at advantageous rates. A furniture carloading association is maintained for the benefit of furniture dealers without charge to them, which makes Evansville an ideal place to purchase all requirements in furniture. A competent traffic department guarantees correct rates on shipments, and is maintained by the Furniture Manufacturers Association of Evansville.

Trade Marked Furniture Begets Confidence

Show a prospective customer furniture without a trade mark and then furniture in the same price class that has the trade mark of a reputable manufacturer — you know the trade marked article will be chosen nine times out of ten — the trade mark instills confidence.

The Bockstege trade mark is a guarantee of quality — every article has been made up to a standard that will sell and stay sold.

There is no better value for the money than Bockstege dining room suites, breakfast suites and tables — a most modern factory, with raw material advantages, makes possible a price advantage that is passed on to the dealer.

Queen Anne Suite No. 2030

Authentic Design

You, who study furniture designs, will admit the superiority of our No. 2030 over other Queen Anne designs, and that it is one of very few shown in several years that is authentic. Note the characteristics of genuine Queen Anne. "Ornate contour and rounded details with plain surfaces, reflecting a feeling of quaint grace;" correctly designed Cabriole leg; fiddle-shaped spat in chair back. There never will be a more popular design than the genuine Queen Anne, as demonstrated by the enormous demand for this suite.

Construction — Doors, fronts and ornaments of select five-ply burl walnut; tops and ends, five-ply select sliced walnut; three-ply back panel in buffet; server and china; balance red gum. Dust-proof construction throughout; boxed in drawers. Finished in the now popular French walnut. "Viscolac" — the new plate finish. Chairs upholstered in mohair, blue or brown genuine leather.

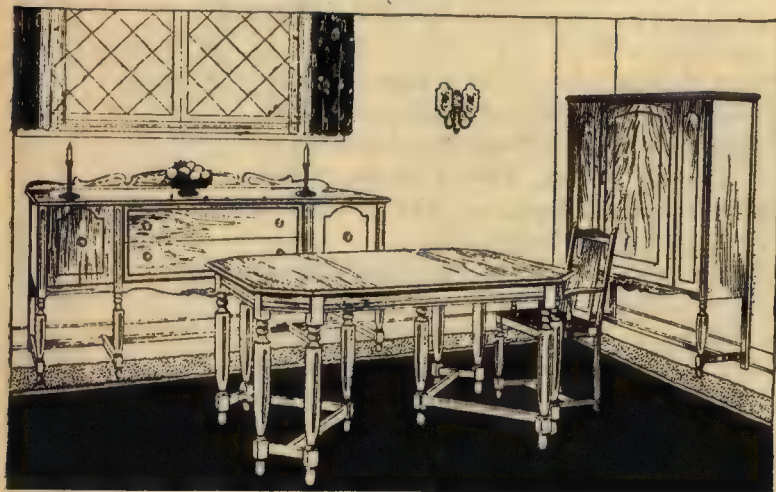

No. 2030

English Renaissance Suite No. 2022

This suite is less ornate than Italian or Spanish suites which are usually rich in carved detail, and having the appearance of massive ones. The design has been pronounced as more in keeping with English sobriety, and will make a strong appeal to those who know and appreciate good furniture design.

Construction — Five-ply sliced walnut tops, fronts and ends, balance red gum. All cases are dust proof, interior finished, and drawer bottoms are three-ply mahogany. Top buffet drawer has silver tray. China door can be furnished with wood panel or glass. Chairs are solid red gum, upholstered in tapestry or blue or brown leather. Entire suite is varnished and satin dull rubbed. Antique old silver hardware.

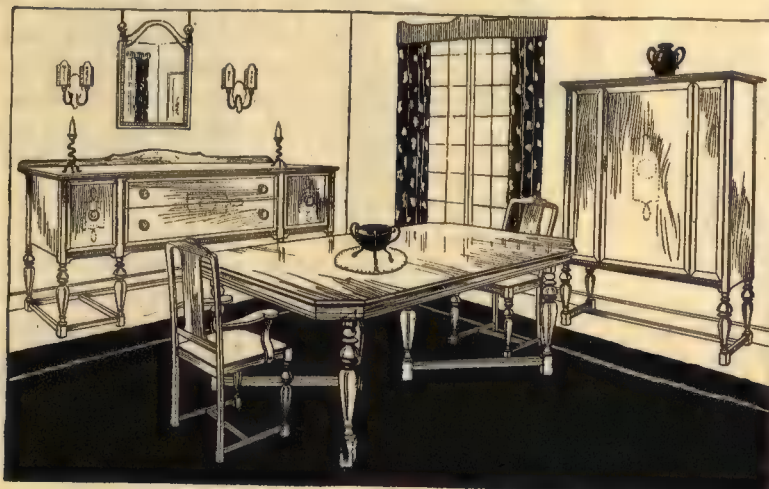

No. 2022

Spanish Renaissance Suite No. 2018

The rich, mellow color tone of Old Walnut and high lights of the Spanumbrian finish of this dining room suite tend to soften the straight sturdy lines of its Spanish design. Although the suite embraces the characteristics and appearance of massive Spanish furniture, it is well adapted for this practical age.

Construction — Carefully matched sliced walnut five-ply tops, fronts and ends; three-ply mahogany drawer bottoms; three-ply backs; posts and rails are red gum. Dust-proof throughout; drawers boxed in. Finish: Old Walnut high lighted, lacquered and dull rubbed.

No. 2018

You should write at once and ask for new Catalogue giving complete description of these and other suites, also dining room, davenport and library tables. Confidential price list will prove that our merchandise is underpriced.

A Real Furniture Center!

SINCE the early days when Indiana had the finest stand of White Oak in America, Indianapolis has ranked among the greatest furniture manufacturing centers in the country. Skill in the trade has been passed down through many generations.

All classes of furniture from office and store equipment to beautiful dining room and bedroom suites are made by the twenty-two Indianapolis factories. The Indianapolis furniture industry has an annual value of over five and a half million dollars.

During the past decade the industry in this city and state has grown to such great importance that Indianapolis manufacturers recently organized a special carloading service for all dealers. This service consolidates shipments of the local and state manufacturers and gives dealers all over the country the advantages of carload shipments on the Indiana-made furniture they buy.

Some of the finest cabinet work in the United States is turned out by Indiana manufacturers, the sons and grandsons of the oldtime "thorough" workmen who first placed Indiana-made furniture in first rank in the markets of the country.

Dealers everywhere recognize the value of Indiana furniture. They know that here they can buy furniture of every description and of every price class. Indianapolis is indeed a real furniture city, the center of a great furniture manufacturing state.

THE DAVENPORT PLUS

MORE THAN A DAVENPORT

Style No. 807—L

The Davenport Plus

This popular number (illustrated) has loose cushions and spring edge construction all around. Springs under cushions tied eight times by hand. Seat 18" high—same comfortable height as the stationary davenport without the bed. Arm 2½" wide. Web bottom chair.

THE ordinary davenport bed is an ingenious creation. But the John J. Madden Davenport Plus is—well, it's a revelation, that's all! There is something almost mystic in the ease with which the full-size bed may be brought forth, or whisked from view—as readily as the magician manipulates white rabbits! .

We say that the Davenport Plus leaves no tell-tale trace of its double purpose. And we mean that literally. It cannot be detected from a davenport, because it is a davenport. Likewise it is a bed. It is not a substitute for either.

The Davenport Plus is made and shipped "set-up," which means that there are none of the customary "davenport bed" joints showing. The back is completely finished in material to match seat and cushions. Available in reliable makes of mohair, tapestry and velour, with wing, low-back and Coxwell chairs to match.

Many styles of the Davenport Plus and other davenport beds are illustrated and described in the John J. Madden Portfolio. Write to-day for your copy.

"Inside Goodness"

UPHOLSTERY can cover a multitude of sins or it can be the cloak of honest, substantial goodness. The life of upholstered furniture depends not on the things seen, but on the quality beneath the surface, and the customer of the furniture dealer must rely on the word of the dealer for his assurance that he is buying wisely.

HOW is the furniture dealer to know what he is selling? In buying case goods he can depend upon his expert knowledge of furniture construction for the detection of inferiority. But in selecting upholstered furniture he in turn must rely on the word or, better still, the reputation of the manufacturer.

THE half-century reputation of Kramer furniture is based on inside goodness. Fine external finish, attractive design, care in the selection of the most pleasing and most durable upholstering materials have been incidental to our insistence upon downright, lasting quality in the foundation construction of every piece of Kramer furniture.

Shelbyville, Indiana

—a Center of the Furniture Industry

The first furniture factory in Shelbyville was started in 1860. The power was a blind horse and the machinery a saw, all other work being done by hand. This factory grew until a new one was built, where water power replaced the old horse. From this humble beginning has grown the furniture industry of Shelbyville. The eighteen large factories being the outgrowth of that one little blind horse power plant. The water power plant was destroyed by fire and the factory built to replace it is still in operation and is still owned by the same family that started the first one.

Shelbyville Furniture Workers form a home owning community, more than eighty per cent of them owning their own home. They know how to make furniture because they were born and brought up in a furniture atmosphere, and the trade has been handed down from father to son. It is not uncommon to find Grandfather, Father and Son all working in the same plant and some of them have only worked in the one factory.

The growth of the Shelbyville Furniture Industry has been gradual and solid. Factories grew, additions were added and new factories built. The industry has produced leaders who have had the vision needed to make it grow. The demand today for Shelbyville furniture is proof that those leaders and founders of the industry had the correct vision, the progressive policies, and sound business judgment necessary to make it an outstanding industry.

Located in what was the heart of the Indiana Oak and Walnut country raw material in the early days was hauled in by the farmers clearing their own lands, and cut into lumber by the factories themselves. Now Shelbyville draws her raw material from the whole world and in turn sends out her product to all the country. Wherever furniture is handled, there Shelbyville is known. To speak of Shelbyville is to speak of furniture.

From the original blind horse, the power used in the furniture factories has reached more than 3,000,000 K. W. H. of electric power per year and an equal amount being generated by steam. In the early days two men and a tape line measured all the lumber. Now Shelbyville lumber inspectors and buyers are found in all the principal lumber producing centers, and Shelbyville furniture salesmen are found wherever there is a railroad.

Shelbyville was a pioneer in the furniture exhibition business. Long before there was a furniture exhibition, Shelbyville manufacturers used to rent a vacant store room in Grand Rapids at certain seasons of the year and put in a few samples. From this grew the proposition of a furniture show and every furniture dealer is familiar with the huge buildings that have been built in Grand Rapids and Chicago for the exclusive purpose of exhibiting furniture.

Shelbyville manufacturers have long felt the need of an agency whereby the home owning public could be made to realize that a house only became a home when the proper goods were put into it. The creation of the American Homes Bureau received the instant support of the Shelbyville manufacturers for they thought that the proposition of building a home instead of a house as put forth by the American Homes Bureau was a step in the right direction.

ARE YOU LIVING ON PRIDE OR PROFITS?

ANY furniture dealer will admit that he would get a lot more satisfaction out of life if he could sell only the very finest made, hand produced furniture.

But the trouble is—he couldn't do it and live.

The stores that are making the most money today are the ones that are selling the most people, —at a profit.

It is a matter of record that the big majority of these stores feature Showers furniture. In fact, more stores sell Showers furniture than any other one make.

And they only do it for one reason

—because it pays.

These stores are as ambitious as you are to sell "exclusive" wares. They sell Showers furniture in big quantities, knowing that it is the kind of furniture which the most people can afford to buy, —and that it offers Better Values and More Profits than any furniture in its price class.

If Showers furniture did not do just that, Showers Brothers Company could not have become America's Largest Furniture Makers.

Because it does just that, the demand for Showers Furniture has been consistently growing.

With this increase in demand it has been possible to achieve still greater economies, permitting the production of an even higher type of furniture in the popular price class.

Today, Showers furniture is better designed, better made, better finished than ever.

If your store has not sold Showers furniture in recent months it has not sold the present type of Showers furniture at all.

It will pay any furniture dealer to get acquainted with the new Showers line. To put the force of bigger values and quicker turnover back of his sales.

You will find that it pays when you come to figure profits at the end of the year.

THE ability of Showers Brothers Company to provide greater values for less money is a simple matter of mathematics. The principle of Volume-Buying is not new to the retail furniture dealer. He sees examples of its added Economy and Efficiency in the successes of the syndicated buying of many retail furniture stores.

Showers Brothers Company have simply intensified those methods in their application to the production of furniture—where massed buying and straight thinking are productive of even more striking results.

Because Showers Brothers Company are the world's greatest producers of furniture, from the standpoint of Volume—it has been possible for them to become its greatest producers from the standpoint of values.

But not alone in size does the Showers organization excel. Before it had attained its present proportions, this organization was noted for its ability to produce with the greatest of economy the kind of furniture demanded by the most people.

Back of this success is the application of these straight line production methods which have made the Showers factories famous.

Showers furniture today is better made, better finished than ever. Proportionate to the present market, it offers greater values than ever.

No store that is seeking Volume Business can afford to ignore the product of the factories which, by the demands they are called on to meet, have been proved to be America's chief source of supply of the kind of furniture in demand by the greatest number of people.

HOW TO EQUIP THE MODERN KITCHEN

—making it well ordered and attractive at little cost

By Lois M. Wyse, Director Hoosier Test Kitchens

No longer do women believe that running water and a gas range make a modern kitchen. They know that even with these conveniences, it can still be a cheerless drudgery room.

The really modern kitchen must meet two great requirements. First, it must be attractive — an inviting, restful place to work. For where we work has so much to do with how we work! You know that dismal depression that engulfs you in a cluttered, unsightly kitchen. But in an orderly, cheerful room — how much more happily we work and therefore more easily!

Second, the kitchen must be convenient; fully, completely furnished! Of all rooms in the house, the one where you spend the most and hardest working hours, should be planned to the last detail. You need adequate equipment to route your work and save much fruitless effort and countless steps.

Now for the new-day kitchen — with Hoosier Kitchen Equipment!

And now you can have such a kitchen — fresh, inviting and efficient — with surprising ease and economy. In the test kitchens of the Hoosier Manufacturing Company at Newcastle, Indiana, domestic science experts have designed equipment that really furnishes your kitchen as completely and attractively as any other room in the house.

The first need to be filled is what no modern kitchen can be without — a working center! To serve this important purpose the Hoosier Kitchen Cabinet is designed.

Planned with scientific regard in every exclusive detail, the Hoosier provides a completeness not possible in any other working center that may be devised.

With the Hoosier Cabinet as the central unit, other Hoosier units are designed to complete the equipment. Every kitchen, of course, needs ample cupboard space in addition to that afforded in the cabinet itself. This added space, once supplied by the old inconvenient butler's pantry, Hoosier now provides in modern movable units, single or double size.

These units may be used in connection with the cabinet on either side or placed in other suitable spaces in the room. With any arrangement you have a complete kitchen suite, matching in finish and design — as uniform as if made to your own special order.

Another attractive Hoosier convenience is the Breakfast Set of table and chairs. Daintily finished in white enamel and decorated in bright colors, the table has a fine porcelain top and the chairs have cane seats.

To modernize old kitchens; to make the new complete

Perhaps you are worrying along with an old unsightly, inconvenient kitchen. You have refurnished the other rooms — now it is the kitchen's turn! Here Hoosier equipment ideally answers your needs,

HOOSIER SINGLE CABINET UNIT—Fitted to hold brooms, mops, vacuum, brushes and a score of little cleaning day necessities. May also be had in a double unit—with the cupboard unit with no fuss or expense of remodeling. It is simply "out with the old; in with the new" — handsome and efficient!

If you are planning a new house, of course, you want your kitchen in keeping with your other rooms. You can make it so, more completely, more easily and inexpensively with Hoosier Kitchen Equipment than with any of your own devising and building. Ask your architect to figure on the Hoosier size and style for your kitchen.

Free to you! — A new book on modern kitchens

We have just published a new book on modern kitchens giving many plans and ideas which you can apply to your own kitchen. This book is free to every woman who is interested in making a better home for her family. We hope you will send for it and also visit the Hoosier store in your town to see the complete Hoosier equipment. Fill out the coupon and we will mail the booklet at once.

In All Woods and Finishes

Chair making is an art. It requires the craftsmanship of specialists.

Some customers buy chairs for their beauty altogether; some buy chairs for their comfort regardless of their looks; while others are more interested in the durability than anything else because so many families have experienced the rapid destruction of chairs and rockers through abuse, etc.

With Faucett-Umphrey chairs, the designers have developed unusual beauty; but in addition, they have combined all of the other attributes including durability, comfort and workmanship.

THE KITCHEN IS THE HEART OF YOUR HOME

Modern Kitchen Planning Demands Porce-Namel Quality

PORCE-NAMEL Kitchen Tables are built to meet the demand for more than four legs and a working surface in what is today one of the most important rooms in the house.

The kitchen is the heart of the home. Its adequate and tasteful furnishing offers dealers great possibilities. A Porce-Namel table with its many convenient features and patented Laflat top which will never buckle, bulge or warp, is a ready seller with which to start.

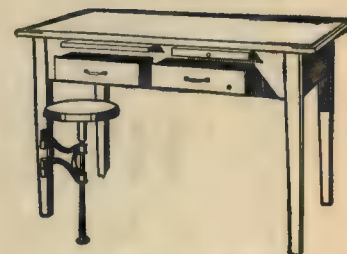

There are hundreds of makes of kitchen tables on the market. But there is only one Porce-Namel line—one manufacturer who can give you Porce-Namel built-in quality from steel glides to exclusive Laflat top.

This Better Homes movement goes beyond the question of price to that of quality, longevity, durability, convenience, appearance. It helps the furniture industry—both manufacturing and selling—to open the way for the kind of merchandise we want for our own homes.

Mutschler Brothers have been builders of fine tables since 1896. Porce-Namel kitchen tables, Samson office and directors' tables, domestic science tables—Mutschler Brothers build into all these that quality the Better Homes Bureau talks about.

Model C has stool, flour bin, cake and bread box, cutlery drawer, and chopping block and kneading board. Genuine Laflat top.

Model K-S has two large drawers, swinging stool and kneading board. Also patented Laflat top.

Sellers and the Merchant

A 30-Year-Old Double Action Policy

For thirty years and more this concern has operated on a double action policy:

First, to make the Sellers Kitchen Cabinet as carefully as fine furniture, and to equip it with every practical and useful time- and labor-saving idea that our ingenuity could conceive.

The freely acknowledged quality of Sellers Kitchen Cabinets—the beauty of the workmanship and finish—the Fifteen Famous Features—and now the new Sellers KlearFront which has completely revolutionized women's ideas of kitchen cabinet design—attest to the faithfulness with which this part of the policy has been carried out.

Second, to work with the dealer, our customer, until the Sellers Kitchen Cabinets he bought of us were moved through his store into the housewives' kitchens.

From our early efforts in advertising and local dealer aids there has been developed the now mighty force of Sellers National Advertising which has made and continues to make the name Sellers known and respected in practically every city, town and hamlet in the United States—and the Sellers Re-Sale system—a scientific system of modern retailing plans—which are an important factor in the tremendous distribution of Sellers Kitchen Cabinets each year, through dealers' stores. Thus has the second part been carried out.

* * * * *

The Sellers Line consists of seven beautiful numbers, in oak and white enamel finish, and the beautiful Sellers White Enamel Kitchen Tables. The kitchen cabinet illustrated is the new Sellers KlearFront in the 42-inch size. The table is our No. 15.

Complete descriptions, prices, discounts, selling plans, etc., will be gladly furnished to merchants who are interested in the Sellers line.

THE CLEAN LINE

The Kitchen Maid IS Different Here's Why!

"The Kitchen Cabinet which grows" is the wonderfully descriptive name of this combination, made of the Kitchen Maid cabinet, surrounded by a broom closet, china closet, and linen closet, which are a part of it in design, beauty and convenience.

Look at the symbols shown above. They are the curved line and the sharp cornered line—the clean line and the labor line. These symbols show you—they show every woman—how the Kitchen Maid Cabinet is different, and better. For they show how Kitchen Maid inside corners are made—curved, "cornerless," easy to clean—a pleasing contrast to the old-fashioned corner, which caught and held dirt, in spite of all a woman's hard work. Thus the Kitchen Maid gives to the woman who owns it more than other cabinets can give. For it gives convenience—plus wonderful cleanliness. The picture above shows how spacious and well arranged this cabinet is. It is made in a full line of sizes, with skillful workmanship, and finished in snow white or golden oak—an ornament to any kitchen.

Patent Applied For

Note that the bands of STEEL webbing are woven basket-wise and each end securely fastened to the frame with screws. The four outer bands continue around the corners of the legs forming the "Corner-lock Construction"

RILLING's method of construction changes the weakest part of upholstered and living room furniture to the strongest, by the use of STEEL webbing instead of fabric webbing, coupled with our original corner-locked frame which makes broken down seats and loose glue joints impossible.

We do not depend upon anything of a fabric nature in building our foundation and spring work.

With our spring construction softer and more comfortable, upholstered furniture can be built on steel webbing.

Our construction has convincing fundamental sales arguments which the public is accepting. People are quickly convinced that our improved construction is a necessity on upholstered furniture, and is the foundation on which quality should be built.

“Buying Fewer Lines is Good Business”

A merchant can't buy haphazard from a lot of different lines and keep a well balanced stock and get rapid turnover. It can't be done.

We believe in concentrated buying, whether from us or from the other fellow, and depend on our values and our service to get our share of the business.

We carry in stock and can make prompt shipments of well known and popular priced lines of Living Room, Bed Room, Dining Room and Kitchen Furniture, besides odd dressers and buffets in walnut and oak, breakfast suites, chairs, tables and cedar chests and refrigerators.

Upholstered Furniture has a greater price range than anything else you buy

For merchandise with a similar, or even identical, outward appearance, in no other kind of furniture is there a greater diversity of price. As a wide-awake dealer, you know that you can buy a staple upholstered suite for almost any figure you wish to pay.

But what kind are you willing to sell and guarantee?

Word-of-mouth advertising, from a satisfied customer to her friends, is still the most potent force for increasing business. You can make use of that force only by continually guarding against the hidden element in upholstered furniture—the part that's beneath the cover.

Thirty-eight years of building only good upholstered furniture is the record of this institution. It is an ideal that many dealers know from experience has helped them to gain that elusive force—customer good will.

Tie up with the Wiener line

"Fibre Furniture that Sells"

Fibre Furniture was first made to be used as porch furniture. The construction was improved, many beautiful finishes created and Fibre Furniture has been advertised as the ideal sun room furniture. But at last Fibre Furniture has come into its own and is now being used extensively for living room furniture. It combines the beautiful effects of the sun room furniture with the endurance of the living room furniture and for a very moderate cost a beautiful living room can be furnished. With proper care Fibre Furniture will last indefinitely and any color scheme in either finish or covering can be carried out, a combination which is impossible in any other furniture.

There are certain conditions in the production of chairs that constantly arise in dry kilning, machining of stock, glueing, sanding and finishing causing great variation in the quality of merchandise coming from the same factory.

For over a year there has been in operation in the Phoenix Plant a careful system based on scientific principles that controls these conditions and maintains a UNIFORM STANDARD of QUALITY at all times. The Trade has manifested its appreciation of our efforts through its volume of orders.

The Furniture Industry In St. Louis

ST. LOUIS being one of the oldest centers of population in the United States, from the earliest history of this country has been the main source of supply for all kinds of manufactured articles for the ever-growing population of the vast territory of the central South, Midwest and the Southwest.

Among the earlier enterprises and continuing to be one of the leading industries of this city is the manufacture of furniture. The nearness of the city to the large hardwood forests, skilled workmen coming from the best class of artisans of Europe, an abundance of cheap fuel right at hand, and being so centrally and ideally located as to greatly simplify the problem of transportation, St. Louis has been and continues to be the ideal place for the manufacture and distribution of all kinds of furniture.

The manufacturer some times can lead, but generally must follow the public taste. It has been always the endeavor of the furniture manufacturers of this city to make the class of goods demanded by the people they have catered to and most suitable for the use to which such articles are put.

As conditions and tastes have changed with the progress of time, a constant study has been made by our manufacturers to keep closely in touch with the wants of the people and to supply them satisfactorily.

There are forty-three factories in St. Louis making every variety of household furnishings and these goods range from the very moderate priced to the highest grade. While considerable of the output is what is termed medium class, the kind used by the greater majority of the people the world over, there are a number of lines manufactured here that are the equal of any furniture produced.

The value of the yearly output of these factories is about twelve million dollars, and the capital invested in the business is nearly ten millions.

The market for St. Louis made furniture has expanded until it is now sold and shipped into every part of this country from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from Canada to Mexico, the South American countries and Cuba, Porto Rico and the other islands of this continent. Shipments have frequently been made to European countries and wherever it has gone it has given the highest satisfaction.

Our finely equipped factories with the natural advantages before enumerated, with the splendid shipping facilities, both by rail and river, make it possible for the furniture manufacturers of St. Louis to offer to the trade a most advantageous market.

The visiting merchant here will find five large wholesale furniture exhibition rooms where samples can be examined and stock selected with the greatest convenience and resulting satisfaction. Sample rooms are also maintained at several of the factories.

The St. Louis Furniture Board of Trade and its long history of leadership in the industry has been a source of pride to its members and of inestimable benefit to the trade in this territory. Its membership includes manufacturers of household and office furniture, the big floor covering jobbing houses, wholesale furniture dealers and as associate members, those concerns which sell the raw materials to the furniture manufacturers.

The objects of the organization are for the closer co-operation among its members for the better manufacture of the products of their factories, the better marketing of such goods, and for the upbuilding of St. Louis as a furniture center. It is the oldest trade organization in St. Louis, having been formed thirty-eight years ago. After about thirty years' existence as an independent organization, it was merged with the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce and became a division of that organization, although it still retains its identity as an organization.

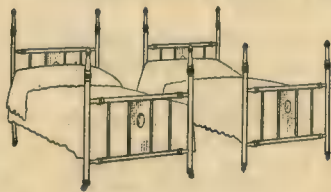

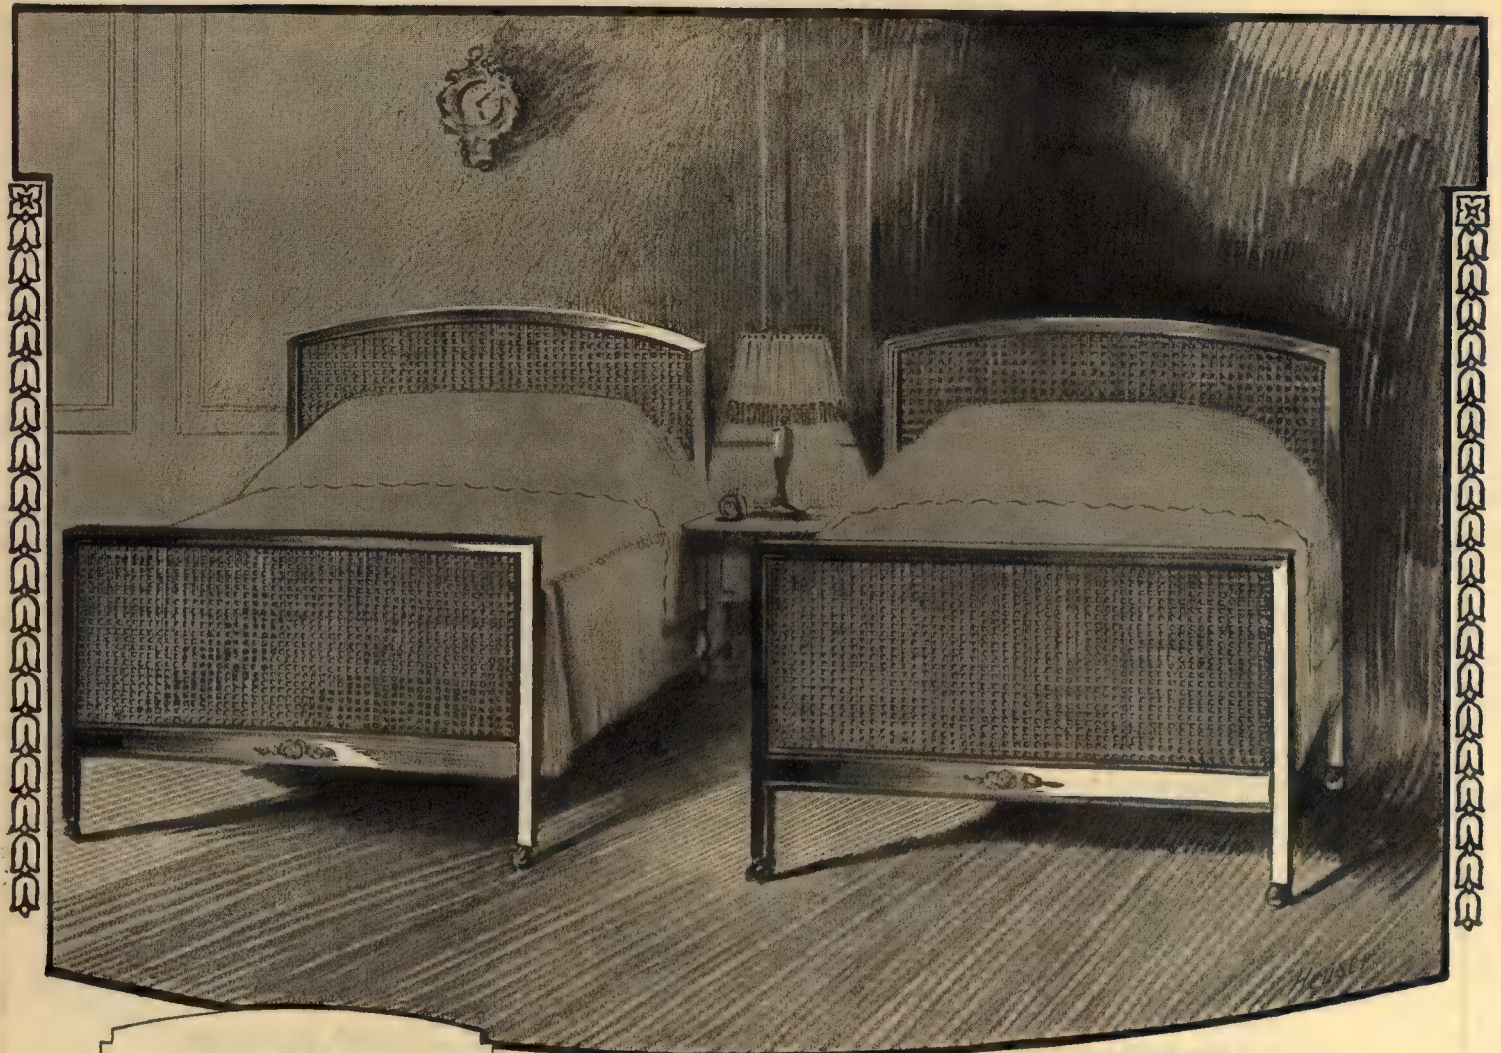

The St. Louis Furniture Board of Trade has been one of the chief factors in making St. Louis one of the leading furniture markets of the country and the predominate market for the trade in the central West, central South and the Southwest.

Twice a year, usually in the months of February and August, the St. Louis Furniture Board of Trade holds what it terms Trade Periods. A certain week or two is set aside at these times and invitations are sent to the retail trade of the country to come to St. Louis and inspect the lines made here. For these market periods the different manufacturers prepare their new samples from which the retailers can select their stocks for the coming season, either for the fall or spring.

A little more than a year ago the St. Louis furniture manufacturers organized the St. Louis Furniture Loading Association, having for its purpose the assembling and forwarding of mixed carloads of freight from the various factories to a large number of general distributing points in different parts of the country. This organization, which was organized for service and not for profit by these farsighted manufacturers has proven to be very popular with the buyers and is taking its place as a vital factor in the upbuilding of this market.

Here, then, the "City Surrounded by the United States" makes possible the most economical assembling of raw materials, with an abundance of all kinds of labor, and most important of all at all times, facilities for quickly and inexpensively reaching the greater part of the country through its superb railroad systems, makes it the ideal market for the discriminating buyer.

The twin beds shown in the large illustration above are our No. 673. Graceful in design, beautifully finished in American Walnut with decoration of roses, this bed is, indeed, a remarkable piece of furniture. The panels are of metal cane closely approximating the handwoven cane of yesteryears. They are made entirely of steel to last a long, long time. Width of bed, 3 feet, 3 inches, or 4 feet, 6 inches.

The small illustration pictures our Twin Beds—No. 893. This design harkens back to the old colonial days of high post beds. It's an all-steel bed, finished in American Walnut, with Metal Cane Panels, tastily embellished with a medallion of roses on the cane. May be had 3 feet, 3 inches or 4 feet, 6 inches wide.

Beauty, Comfort and Assured Durability

IN appearance, graceful and dignified; comfortable beyond all expectation; and built of steel to last for years. That's what you can assure your customers when they buy American Steel Beds.

For twenty-five years the American Bed Company has been making beds, putting into their merchandise the acquired experience of the passing years. In finish, in design, in construction, the product of our corps of trained workers is right.

The American Bed Book for 1924 shows some unusually attractive metal beds, cribs and cots—items that will sell quickly and profitably for you.

SUPERIOR SPRINGS

qualities of your bed*

THE goal upon which all bed spring manufacturers have centered their efforts, is the construction of a resilient, elastic spring which gives with the slightest pressure, but only at the point of contact—plus the retention of these qualities for a period of years. Superior Springs have these qualities and a construction which is so permanent that Superior Springs are guaranteed for 25 years.

Press your hand on any point of a Superior Spring and you will find the slightest pressure is answered by the sensitive coils of Premier spring steel wire, but that the coils are not raised at points opposite the pressure. That makes Superior Springs body-fitting! Not only is more soothing comfort added, but two persons sleeping in the same bed will not involuntarily roll to the center.

Each wire end is carefully turned vertical and downward to the horizontal surface of the spring, safeguarding against injury to the hands or torn bed clothing or mattress. What a relief this feature is to the housewife or maid!

Despite the fact that Superior Springs possess such unusual features and that they are durable enough to be guaranteed for 25 years they are light enough to be handled easily. And they possess a beauty, with the attractive gray enamel finish, which has a certain appeal to the exacting housewife.

Superior Springs are made in several types of construction and for any bed. Your dealer will gladly explain their many assets

The Furniture Industry in the South and its Product

By Harold C. Bennett

FOR many years after the South had first started shipping hardwoods into the North to be manufactured into furniture there were no local woodworking industries of any kind making a finished product. In fact the dawn of the Southern Furniture Industry was not until about thirty-five years ago, when one by one several small enterprises were started to manufacture furniture from materials which were then close at hand. Today the South is supplying more lumber and hardwoods to the furniture industry than ever before, besides manufacturing and selling twenty-five per cent of all the wooden household furniture made in the United States.

The beginning of the twentieth century saw North Carolina fast becoming the center of this industry with some thirty-five factories to her credit, and as many more scattered among the several southern states. Southern furniture was being recognized in many sections of the country as filling the great demand for cheap merchandise created by the vast industrial development in the North. So these new struggling factories took their cue and made cheap furniture, lots of it, and awfully cheap.

However, twenty years in the furniture industry has seen many change in demand. Twenty years have seen an almost insignificant industry develop into a powerful and dominating factor in the business of this country. Twenty years in the Southern Furniture Industry has seen a greater progress and development than can be attributed to any other of the furniture sections or centers.

Probably the outstanding feature of this development has been in the improvement of the quality of the goods made in the South. In the early days, almost without exception, the very cheapest grades of furniture were produced in the South, and termed "plunder" by the older manufacturing centers. Such marked progress has been made in the skill of the furniture workers today that the quality of the furniture produced in the South is equal to furniture made in Jamestown, Chicago, Rockford, or Grand Rapids. Southern furniture has a nationwide reputation, as well as distribution, in competition with the large centers of the North and West. North Carolina today has 107 furniture factories of which forty-three are located in High Point alone. Tennessee, Virginia, and Georgia, follow with nearly one hundred more plants, making a total of some two hundred furniture factories to be considered as the Southern Furniture Industry.

From an invested capital of three and a quarter million dollars in 1910, the industry jumped in ten years time to an invested capital of six and one-half million dollars in North Carolina alone. With 83 factories in 1910, North Carolina produced furniture valued at $11,232,000.00, while ten years later with only one hundred and seven factories the value of the output increased to $30,288,761.00 with actual sales probably running $5,000,000.00 more, an increase of nearly 200% in ten years time. It is estimated that the output of all southern factories was 23% greater in 1923 than the year previous. 15,387 solid carloads of furniture were handled in the South in 1922, as against 8,986 carloads in 1921, and 23,095 in 1923. These figures show an increase of 157% while the figures for the entire country show but an 85% increase. While the 1923 figures are not available at this time the increase in furniture production in Georgia, Tennessee, and Virginia was equal to that of North Carolina, and a total volume of over $100,000,000.00 sales is a conservative estimate for the entire southern territory.

Throughout the South this increase has been brought about by the construction of new factories, additions to old plants and more efficient methods of production.

During all the years that furniture has been made in the South, North Carolina has maintained its supremacy in the industry with High Point as the central city. When several years ago a group of far-seeing business men gathered to build a permanent showroom for the furniture buyers of the nation to visit, compare, and buy their merchandise under the most favorable conditions, High Point was selected and the mammoth Exposition Building which now stands in the city is a monument to Southern Made Furniture. This great ten-story structure was built at a cost of one million two hundred thousand dollars. It contains 208,000 square feet of floor space. Some 170 exhibitors display merchandise the year around on its floors and it is visited annually by two thousand furniture buyers. Twice yearly the formal markets are held, in January and July, for a two weeks' period. The attendance of buyers during the July market, 1924, was nearly one thousand alone.

The mouthpiece of the Southern Furniture Exposition Building and the Southern Made Furniture is the Southern Furniture Market News, published monthly at High Point, and mailed out to ten thousand furniture dealers—all over the United States. And so we find the products of the furniture industry in the South being sold in every state in the Union and many outside countries as well. In the beginning of this industry much of the material used could be found at the very doors of the factories in the South. Today the South is buying quantities of materials from the four corners of the earth, all of which are used in the fashioning of furniture for American homes.

In the distribution of Southern Furniture we discover, strange to say, that less than one-half of it is sold at home. And we also find that approximately one-half of the furniture bought in the South comes from Northern factories, proving that the location of the various furniture centers has little to do with the demands and the market for their products.

The growth of the Southern Furniture Industry has been solid and steady. Like all other industries it has produced its leaders in men who have set and maintained a pace in progressive policies that are responsible for its success. An intensive study of manufacturing processes accompanied by a vast amount of research work, a study of designing, a careful gauging of public tastes, and the quantity production of merchandise through native born white labor at low costs, have been the contributing factors.

With all the progress the South has made in the manufacturing and selling of furniture the industry today is facing the greatest opportunity for expansion and growth it could have dreamed for. The great building program of homes has found a nation-wide activity. The aftermath of the war is producing a desire for the independence of owning your own home. The American Homes Bureau is teaching that homes are created, not built, and they are made from the inside out, whether it be a humble cottage, a bungalow, apartment, or spacious mansion. It is what you put into your abode that changes the house or flat into a HOME. Because it is built for home owners, Southern Made Furniture has reached the high plane upon which it stands today. And Southern Furniture is American Made by American Citizens, ninety per cent of whom own their own homes.

A Line that Brings Repeat Orders

Priced at the lowest possible figure commensurate with an honest standard of quality in construction, materials and finish, our low and medium priced line of furniture moves fast off the retail floor, bringing us a constant stream of repeat orders from satisfied customers.

Odd Dressers, Chiffoniers and Buffets in Oak

both in straight line cases and Colonial designs. One of the cleanest lines on the market regardless of price. The cabinet work is excellent and through the use of more sanding than is customary in other factories the finish is unusually bright and attractive.

Complete Bedroom Suites in Combination Gum and Walnut

We specialize in one complete suite in Queen Anne design and one in Tudor style. Genuine walnut veneer is used in both these suites with drawers finished inside in mahogany stain. Three-ply wood glass backs. We give special attention to fill-in orders on these suites, which dealers are finding to be most profitable lines to handle.

Furniture for more than forty years—*

The close application, throughout this long period, of intelligent effort to all the details of production; the persistent, painstaking, conscientious study of the many and varied problems of good furniture making, are now reflected in the high standard of quality found in the present Chattanooga line.

These advantages coupled with the economies effected through standardization and the limiting of the line to a few designs make possible the exceptional values to be found in these Dining Room Suites.

In 1816, fifty years before, Royal Keyes established the first cabinet shop in Jamestown—the foundation of the Jamestown Furniture Industry.

Today, through the honorable achievements of four generations of expert craftsmen, the production of more than a hundred factories, in and about Jamestown, constitutes a great source of supply of available furniture, designed and made for the comfort and adornment of American Homes, and successfully distributed by the progressive Furniture Merchants of America.

The same strategic location of Jamestown makes possible quick delivery and safe transportation. ## "The Best Made Line in America"

¶The above phrase was first quoted in a letter received by us from a large Middle West Dealer a number of years ago. He was referring to our line.

¶We immediately adopted it as our slogan and standard and the increased demand for our products leads us to believe that we are living up to it.

¶The best in design and construction has become a "hobby" with us and only the most luxurious and durable upholstery fabrics, products of the greatest textile mills of America and Europe, are used; thus we uphold our standard, "The Best Made Line in America."

A new creation in bedroom furniture—lasting beauty, shaped in steel

No longer need the bedroom furniture you buy run a losing race with time. In one year, or in ten the charm of a Simmons Steel Bedroom Suite will be as fresh, its strength as sturdy as on its first happy day of use.

For it is fashioned entirely of steel. And the softest tints of its color finishes—baked on in superheated ovens—are proof against any accident ever likely to happen in your home.

You will find it hard to believe that such stamina can be built into the graceful lines of its eight period and modern suites. The clinched and welded joints cannot be wrenched loose. Slender Louis XVI legs will not split or break. Drawers never swell and stick in the dampest weather.

You can spill perfume, medicine, alcohol, water or scalding tea on a dresser or table top and wipe it up without a trace. Live steam will not dim its color or luster. Even the crawling fire of a forgotten cigar or cigarette leaves no tragic scar behind.

There are eight complete suites, 110 pieces, to pick your own suite from. Suit your fancy in finish—six new colors and American walnut and mahogany faithfully reproduced.

No other furniture is so easy to live with—so economical—so satisfying to both home owners and merchants.

The harmonious contrast of Venetian blue furniture and rose-colored wilton rug gives this spacious bedroom a distinctive charm. Curtains are of cotton grenadine or muslin. The apricot of the overdrapes is echoed in the parchment lampshade and vanity ornaments. Bordered with bands of soft lilac, the green white shirred bedspreads, like the overdrapes, can be of silk taffeta or mercerized fabrics. The floral note of the decoration on the bed covers is repeated in the chintz-pattern wall paper and the Colonial book or rag rug. The furniture is of steel, a new Simmons Windsor suite finished in Venetian blue with striping in old ivory and gold. Design 121-H. Supplied also in standard Simmons colors, and in finishes reproducing American walnut and brown mahogany. Beds are Design 1077. For twelve other interesting color schemes, write for "Restful Bedrooms" to The Simmons Company, 666 Lake Shore Drive, Chicago.

Sleep equipment at the lowest prices it is safe for you to pay

A mattress may look good. Its price may be low. But does its bright ticking hide unsanitary materials of questionable quality? Will it last? Will its smooth softness mat into sleep-disturbing hollows and "hard-spots"?

How can you judge the worth of a bed spring? Can you tell whether its coils are wrought from fine spring steel? Can you be sure it will not sag, spread, bulge and squeak?

How will the bed or the bedroom furniture you buy today look and serve, ten years from now? Will it be marred, cracked, shaky or broken?

You don't have to gamble. You need not wonder. You can know. Look for the Simmons Label and you can feel satisfied and safe before you buy.

Then you will have real assurance that the furniture or spring or mattress is the very finest the largest manufacturer of bedroom equipment can produce for the money you pay.

That means it is the best that can be produced at its price—the utmost in value your dollars can buy.

For actual economy—and the range of styles is wide enough to fit every pocketbook—and for the glorious luxury of sound, restful sleep, Simmons sleep equipment—beds, mattresses, springs, cots, cribs, day-beds and bedroom furniture—are without equal.

Soft tan and ivory walls harmonize with the hand-blocked linen curtains and heavy silk taffeta bed covers in this charming English bed-chamber. The rich blue of the dresser slip, window draperies and comforters is supported in tone by the hydrangea rug. The lamp shades combine corn-colored and blue taffeta. Chintz or cretonne can also be used for curtains, and mercerized cotton taffeta or poplin for bed covers. The beds, night table and dresser are from a complete new suite of Simmons Steel Furniture, Design 109-G, Sheraton in effect, in a finish reproducing American walnut. Also supplied in brown mahogany, leaf green, Venetian blue, putty gray, ivory, stippled parchment and jade green. Beds are Design 1926, in a new "oval-bend" reminiscent of Queen Anne furniture. For twelve other interesting color schemes write for "Restful Bedrooms" to The Simmons Company, 666 Lake Shore Drive, Chicago.

Lasting beauty, service and economy are united in Simmons beds in an interesting range of designs, finishes and prices

The best of period and modern designs and the most exquisite of colorings and fine wood finishes are combined with the strength of steel in every Simmons bed.

The design above—No. 1350—is one of the latest creations. Both head and foot have the graceful curves characteristic of fine Queen Anne furniture. The solid center panels are set off by panels of Simmons cane on either side. Continuous round pillars.

Standard finishes reproduce native walnut or brown mahogany. Full width and twins. Not at all expensive. A lifetime of satisfying service and beauty assures real economy.

Colonial grace at a price surprisingly low

Design 1058—The demand today is for Windsor furniture. These modern beds were strongly influenced by that charming style. Solid side panels emphasize the beauty of the center grill-work. Round, continuous steel pillars match grace with strength. The finishes reproducing brown mahogany and walnut are enhanced by narrow stripes of gold.

Simplicity and striking value in a desirable bed

Design 1924—Conservative in style, sturdy in construction, durable in materials and finish. Harmonizes with bedroom pieces of almost any good design. There is a charming "oval bend" to the square, continuous pillars of both head and foot. The fillers of flat tubing are evenly spaced. Finishes reproduce brown mahogany or native walnut. Full, three-quarter and twin widths.

The Simmons Purple Label is the most luxurious mattress made, yet it costs less per day than your evening newspaper

Every Purple Label is actually three mattresses in one. Two thick cushions of high-grade curled hair—hand-laid and hand-tufted to a non-stretching canvas base—form the top and bottom.

Between them, 810 sensitive, small, coil springs are built into a third mattress. In separate fabric pockets, each spring carries its own load, gently supporting every curve in weary bodies. The automatic ventilation keeps the mattress always fresh and sweet.

In cradling comfort and length of service, the Purple Label gives more than any other mattress at a cost nightly of only a few cents.

Stays new long after others are old

Why lose sleep when the "Red Label," the best felted cotton mattress built, costs so little?

Deep layers of buoyant felted cotton fill this mattress with lasting comfort. Built with crowned center. Imperial roll edge dresses the bed when made. Diamond tufted. Four rows of side stitching. High-grade covering in exclusive art design or woven stripes. Packed and delivered, like all Simmons mattresses, in dust-tight cartons.

A bargain in cushioning comfort

Outstanding value at moderate cost features the Simmons "Yellow Label" Mattress

Thrifty buyers find this high-grade, low-cost mattress the best value for the money. Filled with thick layers of clean new cotton felt. Not a shred of second-hand or "re-worked" materials is allowed in any Simmons mattress. Diamond tufted. Crowned center. Roll edge. Quality covering in an attractive over-all floral design.

Quality      Style      Comfort      Service

The quality of upholstered furniture can not be determined by the outside appearance. The construction of the frame, the proper setting of the springs and the quality of inside materials, are the most important factors.

The frames of BUFFALO LOUNGE CO.'S UPHOLSTERED FURNITURE are made in our own factory from selected hardwoods and are thoroughly kiln dried. Experienced cabinetmakers construct every frame by the most improved method. All frames are hot glued and doweled at every joint and thoroughly corner blocked throughout.

The large seat springs are made of oil tempered steel and are of the double cone type. These springs are set on the best quality webbing foundation. The webbing is set close together and double tacked to insure a solid foundation for the spring work. The springs are tied eight knots to each spring with the best quality of American hemp twine.

All pieces (with the exception of six special suites) are filled with Moss and Curled Hair. All Curled Hair filling may be ordered at a slight additional cost.

The upholstering is in the hands of Skilled Craftsmen who thoroughly perform the many operations necessary to maintain the highest standard of workmanship. The first stuffing is thoroughly quilted—the proper stitching of this operation is important as it binds the filling to prevent shifting. The second stuffing is covered with a fine quality of sheet wadding which prevents the filling from coming through the covering.

A great variety of coverings are offered which range from the medium grades of tapestries and velours to the finest qualities of mohairs, wool tapestries, Jacquard velours and brocatelles.

IN the truest sense of the word Buffalo values are artistic, always possessing that rare Charm and Beauty which is to be noted in the suite illustrated.

Refinement of design and honest craftsmanship give every piece an irresistible appeal and awakes in the mind of your customer a desire to buy.

Comfort, both as Davenport and Bed—Simplicity in Operation.*

Stickley Davenport Beds are famous for the Beauty and Variety of their Design, there being a hand-made pattern made to fit in with the furnishings of any room in the home. # THE CONANT LINE

No. 777

THE piece shown is but suggestive of the numerous up-to-the-minute patterns in wood-seats and fine upholstered pieces, as well as cane and over-stuffed suites, produced in the CONANT factories. There is in fact scarcely a chair requirement, whether it be for the living room, library or hall, which cannot be met with considerable advantage from the CONANT LINE.

The beauty and perfection of design, the quality of material and workmanship of CONANT CHAIRS, all combined with marked reasonableness of price, insure for them a repeated sale to the discerning customer.

There is no more convincing evidence of the integrity and reliability of any manufacturer or product than the steadily increasing popularity enjoyed by CONANT FURNITURE throughout the seventy-four years of its existence.

This Fine Old Colonial House Has Linoleum Floors

WHEN Mrs. E. F. Lilley, of Milford, Massachusetts, purchased this delightful old colonial homestead and began to remodel it, she faced the problem of replacing old wood floors, worn and splintered through generations of hard usage.

Mrs. Lilley had often read the Armstrong's Linoleum advertisements in the leading magazines, suggesting the new decorative uses of linoleum floors for every room in the house. She wrote the American Bureau of Interior Decoration for suggestions, which was sent her. Now Mrs. Lilley says:

"I am very well pleased with the floors. Our local merchants secured the patterns you recommended and I found the suggestions that your Interior Decorator gave me for wall paper and hangings very helpful."

Fostering Better Homes

The Armstrong color pages in the magazines reach nearly every worth-while home in your community. These beautiful color pages tell the story of better home furnishing. Each offers many suggestions to the women of America, which result not only in creating interest in the decorative uses of linoleum floors, but also in fostering the better homes movement.

Our Bureau of Interior Decoration will gladly work with any merchant handling Armstrong's Linoleum to plan color schemes for the homes of your customers. Let us help sell linoleum floors as a part of interior decoration. Send for a copy of "The Art of Home Furnishing and Decoration," and let us explain this service to you.

ONE of the oldest and most reliable furniture factories in these United States is the J. O. Frost's Sons, of Towanda, Pennsylvania, and from the fact that this factory never has any dull times speaks for itself as to the quality and price of its merchandise. They are making exclusively a dining room line, with the same man at the head that started with it in 1865. We are giving merchandise of the correct style and right price at all times, and our merchandise sells as soon as placed on the floors of the salesrooms. It is a great profit getter.

Gardner, Massachusetts

The City of Chairs and Baby Carriages

THE development of the chair and furniture industry in Gardner has been one of steady growth from the handicraft stage beginning about a century and a quarter ago. The first chair was made in 1805 when James M. Comee made one for his mother out of lumber secured nearby. It was so much admired and so much better than any that could be purchased at that time, that Mr. Comee made many more like it for his neighbors and friends. These first chairs were made entirely by hand with the aid of a foot lathe.

The founder of this great industry later went into business on a larger scale taking in with him other men as apprentices. Soon they became skillful in manufacture, and seeing the vast opportunities went into business for themselves. The growth of Gardner as a chair center has been just according to this procedure, a steady and constant growth from within.

In the absence of railroad development in those days, the larger output of chairs which was being made in Gardner had to be sold by horse and wagon from house to house. Yankee tin peddlers from Connecticut and chair peddlers from Gardner, Massachusetts, were familiar sights on the highways of the East in those days. Among the first to start operations on a large scale were Levi Heywood and his three brothers, Benjamin, Walter, and William. Although Comee started the chair industry, the Heywoods developed it.

Other famous names in these early years were Ezra Baker, Deacon Asa Perley, Elijah Brick, Elijah Putnam, and Moses Wood. The descendants of many of these men are still manufacturing chairs in Gardner, while some of the old firms they founded are still operating although changed in name. It can thus be seen that Gardner factories today have a long history besides a reputation for quality and workmanship which they highly value and religiously uphold.

The enlargement of the chair business to its present stage can be credited to the invention of chair machinery which was first manufactured in Gardner in 1876 by L. G. McKnight. Today there are some sizeable concerns in Gardner devoted entirely to the making of chair machinery which is shipped all over the world. It can fairly be said that Gardner is not only the largest chair making center in the world but with its constant new inventions and devices is the brain center of the industry as well. It is of interest to note that the president of the National Chair Manufacturers' Association today is Ashton P. Derby of this city who owns and operates a chair factory here.

At this time Gardner has eighty factories engaged in making chairs and kindred lines which have sprung up, such as baby carriages, doll carriages, go-carts, cribs, cradles, toys, tables, silverware, upholstered furniture, oil stoves, and reed and fibre products. The average number of workers employed is forty-five hundred, the amount of raw material consumed is $10,000,000.00 and the yearly output of the city is $20,000,000.00, while the number of chairs made yearly totals $5,000,000 and ranks first in importance. The baby carriage and oil stove businesses are close bidders for second honors.

The importance of the eastern market at Gardner is being felt more and more by retail furniture dealers throughout the country who are finding the array of products offered here and at Winchendon, Massachusetts, the toy town just five miles away, of great appeal. A furniture exchange building costing $1,000,000.00 to house permanent displays of Gardner products is now in process of construction and will be ready for occupancy by January 1st, 1925.

The first organized attempt at a Market Week was held in Gardner in September, 1924, when the manufacturers invited the twenty-five hundred retail furniture dealers of New England to be their guests for Gardner At-Home Day and look over the many factories of the city. Five hundred dealers were present and the event was declared a great success both by dealer and manufacturer. This is the beginning of the Gardner Market Day which will be observed yearly hereafter.

In regard to location Gardner has a great advantage in selling to the dense population of New England and in fact the entire eastern section of the country.

The future of the Gardner furniture industry is secure. Its factories are modern and efficient, its managers are progressive and experienced, its workmen are intelligent and skillful, while its products are well-known and tested.

The vast population and extensive purchasing power of the East lie at its very doors. Gardner furniture is made with dignity, utility, and honest value to grace the American home, church, school, factory and store. Today it is the center of the chair manufacturing and chair machinery business of this country and will not only maintain its preeminence in this field but will increase it. The future holds much of promise.

ENDURING goodness characterizes these staunch, graceful chairs of Puritan days. Though they are models of simplicity, possibly because of that fact, they consistently outsell many of the more decorative but less homelike patterns of period furniture.

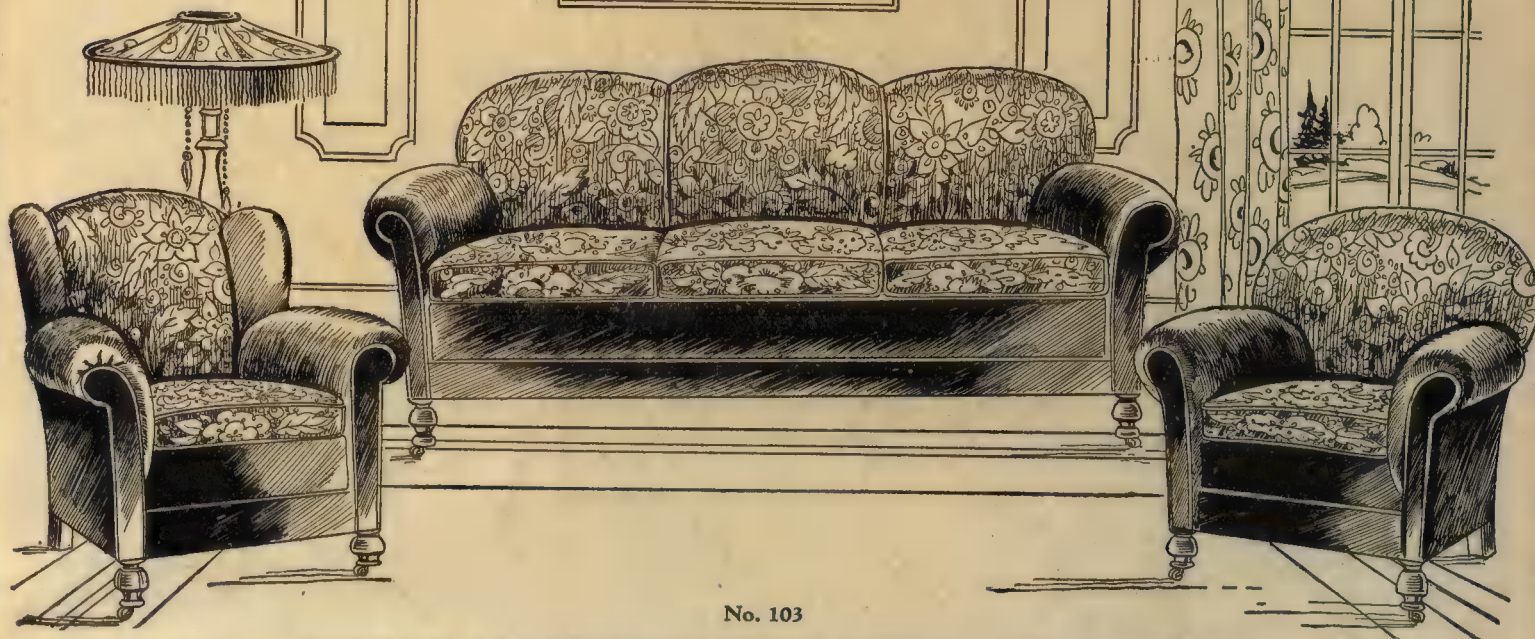

These colonial chairs are made of birch. The joints are fitted and glued with extreme care, and are rigidly inspected before shipping. They are finished in Mahogany, Walnut and White Enamel. Companion rockers can be furnished.

Year in and year out, the sales of these comfortable chairs, with their suggestion of open fireplaces, knitting grandmothers, and purring kittens, keep on increasing.

Appeal and Profit—

Dealers all over the country are finding that Standard of Baltimore Suite 198 exerts a wonderful appeal to pride of ownership among customers in their stores. And this appeal—the suite “looking” every cent of its full retail price, including of course your regular mark-up, translates itself into most substantial dealer profits since our policy of restricted sales eliminates bitter price competition between close competitors. Suite 198 is being placed and replaced on the best known floors in the country, and deserves to be on yours. Bed, Dresser, Chiffonrobe and Vanity—$250. Chairs, Bench and Night Table to match, $45.

In every locality there are always one or two stores that are gold mines. The secret is the determination to stock only "Right" goods. The spirit of the store becomes one of service. It soon puts itself beyond competition.

Conscience Brand Mattresses, Pillows, and Box Springs work hand-in-hand with such a policy. They are manufactured to a quality, not to a price. They are worth your investigating.

The Difference—Pictured

Ordinary Straight Slat Shade

Pat. April 6, 1920

WARREN'S BEVEL VENTILATING SLAT SHADE

The Bevel Slat does it! Warren's Bevel Slat Shades may be distinguished by the bevel of the individual slat which is at a 45° angle. It is this patented feature that prevents the entrance of glaring sunlight and rain. Ventilation is positive; the narrow openings between the slats assure comforting circulation, even on most sultry days—or nights.

Because Warren's Bevel Slat Shades cannot be seen through, strict privacy is permitted. Many folks use this equipment on sleeping porches. The cost is but a fraction of the more pretentious porches—the comfort unsurpassed. Shades are available in weather-proof brown and green. Reliable dealers almost everywhere have them.

The outstanding feature of Doernbecher furniture is its salability, which after all is the important consideration of the furniture merchant.
